In Ashdod, however, the efficiency plan would have made as many as 300 of the 800 stevedores redundant, because the more militant Ashdod stevedores had resisted such efficiency measures for the past decade. Moreover, the average age in the younger Ashdod port is considerably lower, and the men facing dismissal would need new jobs to augment their smaller pension benefits. Levy may have hurt his own chances

By DAVID LANDAU Post Diplomatic Correspondent

If Deputy Prime Minister David Levy had any chance of being appointed foreign minister, that chance has now been greatly reduced by Levy's own public conduct. This was the assessment of informed sources last night, following Levy's public assertion that Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's "credibility and collegiality" were at stake if he did not appoint him foreign minister. (News background, page 2).

Shamir and Levy are expected to meet alone this morning to discuss - and presumably attempt to ease the now open feud between Yesterday, Shamir held a special consultation of Herut ministers which Levy declined to attend. The Herut Party secretariat decided last night to hold a special meeting next week with all Herut cabinet ministers participating to discuss the situation that has been created by Levy's bid for the foreign affairs portfolio.

Some political observers felt that Levy himself had concluded he had no chance of being named foreign minister and thus he had nothing to lose from attacking the premier in

But there was much speculation as to what Levy hoped to gain from the attack.

Levy's attack came in an impromptu press conference with newsmen in his hometown. Beit Shean, on Wednesday night. (It was reported in yesterday's Jerusalem Post.) He reiterated his claim that he had reached "an understanding" with the premier about the foreign affairs portfolio, and railed against "those purporting to be 'sources

BRUSSELS (AP). - The U.S. and its three partners in the multinational peace-keeping force yesterday expressed their determination to remain in Lebanon. But there were suggestions their patience could run out if solutions to Lebanon's problems do not emerge soon.

UN adamant on giving Arafat its protection Rejects Israel's appeal

By DAVID LANDAU

Post Diplomatic Correspondent UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar yesterday rejected a request by Israel that it withdraw the permission it has given Palesti-nian terrorists to leave Tripoli under the symbolic protection of the UN

In a statemenent, quoted by Reuter he said the authorization. approved unanimously by the Security Council last Saturday, was given on "purely humanitatian grounds. In a letter to Perez de Ceullar, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir cited the PLO's assumption of responsibility for Tuesday's busbomb in Jerusalem, in which four persons died and dozens were wounded. "It is inconceivable," Shamir wrote, that the UN should help Arafat and his men depart Tripoli.

There was no hint in the letter of whether Israel proposed to act independently to prevent Arafat's departure - as two cabinet ministers have proposed.

But well-placed sources consider this most unlikely.

These sources said last night the cabinet had yet to take a formal decision on whether Israel should act. Earlier in the day, when asked about proposals by Ministers Ariel Sharon and Yitzhak Moda'i that Israel move against Arafat in Tripoli, Shamir said "all proposals" would be considered.

Moda'i, at last Sunday's cabinet, suggested that Israel capture Arafat before he can embark.

Sharon, in media interviews, has said it would be a "grave mistake" for Israel to allow the PLO chief to escape from Tripoli alive.

Shamir's letter read: "On Tuesday, December 6, the terrorist organization known as PLO, which is headed by Yasser Arafat, assumed presonsibility for the explosion in a bus in Jerusalem.

This barbarous act was perpetrated against passengers on a regular city bus and was clearly aimed to kill the maximal number of

Accordingly I request you to cancel the arrangements that have been made to give them safe con-duct under the UN flat."

Reuter quotes Arafat's spokesman as saying in Tripoli that France and Greece have agreed to provide warships to escort the terorist leader and his men.

The PLO asked for the military escort on Wednesday because of fears that the Israel Navy would intercept the four Greek ships evacuating them.

Spokesman Ahmed Abdel-Rahman told reporters that the PLO had also asked Italy to send warships, but had not yet received a formal reply. The evacuation is due to take place within 13 days under an agreement between Arafat and Syrianbacked rebels within the PLO who advanced to the edges of Tripoli in heavy fighting last month.

The spokesman said the first of six Greek ships, four passenger liners and two cargo ships to carry weapons, would arrive in Tripoli port tonight.

In Athens, however, a Greek Merchant Marine Ministry spokesman denied any had yet set sail. The ministry was still considering tenders from shipping companies, he said.

Big jolt, computer failures delay Columbia's landing

HOUSTON (AP). - A massive jolt followed by failure of a computer and of a key navigation instrument forced the six men of the Columbia space shuttle to delay their return to Earth for hours yesterday while engineers in mission control analyzed the problems.

The astronauts were in no immediate danger and there were spare computers and instruments on board but NASA officials said they wanted to understand the problem before committing Columbia to a danding at Edward Air Force Base. California.

Mission Commander John Young reported the problems started with a powerful jolt as he was preparing to return to Earth with his five crewmates, pilot Brewster Shaw, and scientists Owen Garriott, Bob Parker, Ulf Merbold and Byron Lichtenberg.

INSURANCE COMPANY GENERAL AGENTS U.S.A. Levy's demand is exercise in brinkmanship Levy's demand is exercise in brinkmanship late prime minister Golda Meir.

Housing Minister David Levy from the consultation between Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and a few top Herut ministers yesterday morning is the latest manifestation of the agitation within the country's ruling political party concerning the pecking order.

We are not witnessing turmoil presaging a split, such as the Labour movement suffered in the past, nor the departure of a political figure into the wilderness, in the way that former defence minister Ezer Weizman picked up and left public life.

What we are seeing is an exercise in brinkmanship between Levy on the one hand, and all the other seven Herut ministers on the other. This brinkmanship, like most political brinkmanship, will most probably find a settlement which both sides can live with, however uncomfortable it may seem to them.

But because Levy feels disadvantaged, cheated, and crowded by odds of seven to one, his irritation and (some say) his inordinate sensitivity may prompt him to go too far in fencing with seven opponents. He could conceivably pass the point of no return, which spells political death.

The issue is Levy's demand to be given the Foreign Ministry portfolio which Shamir continues to hold as prime minister. Some of Levy's followers say the deputy premier got "a promise" from Shamir, but Levy himself says he got "an understanding" from Shamir about the portfolio. Now Levy says he wants a definite

The foreign ministry is a substantial portfolio, but its value is symbolic as well. Levy wants it because it's the only prestigious job standing empty just now, when the premiership, defence and finance are filled. However impressive it sounds to be a deputy premier, as Levy is, it carries no power and it commands no patronage. No wonder the glittering title of deputy premier lost its sparkle in Levy's eyes when Shamir, away in Washington, did not even bother to make him privy by phone or cable to a handful of state secrets.

Levy is asking for the foreign ministry because he needs to prove to himself that the 40

Central Committee, which gave Shamir 60 per cent support and the premiership, has real meaning. He wants it translated into patronage, a national image and a permanent entry into the highest councils in the land.

. The other seven Herut ministers want to prove just the opposite. They want to keep Levy in his place. They want to show him (if they can, though perhaps they cannot) that the support he mustered at the Herut Central Committee a few months ago was a flash-in-the-pan, They want to signal to him that Begin's departure, and the subsequent reshuffle within the leadership, has not established a permanent new pecking order, and that Levy is still a grade-B cabinet minister.

Levy is irritated beyond all measure, battling against such enormous odds. He has far more than pulled his own weight at election times, having proven to be Herut's biggest votecatcher after Menachem Begin. Now, with Begin gone, he knows how much his party, and the Likud bloc, need him.

Levy is also irritated because he believes the 40:60 per cent ratio in the Herut Central Committee showed that it took seven cabinet ministers pulling together to mobilize Shamir's 60 per cent support. That may sound like oversimplification to some, but not to David Levy.

The other seven Herut ministers feel themselves threatened by Levy's popularity. They regard him as too big for his boots already. So they are reluctant to see him get the foreign ministry as a prize for his new stardom.

David Levy also resents the emergence of a troika at the head of Herut and at the head of the government: Shamir, Defence Minister Moshe Arens and Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad. He and other Herut politicians believe that Shamir has shaped this "kitchen cabinet" around himself, which Levy attends sometimes but not always. It appears to him that matters are brought to the cabinet after having been "cooked" beforehand by Shamir, Arens and Cohen-Orgad.

Levy does not object to the existence of the "kitchen cabinet" system, made famous by the late prime minister Golda Meir. What he wants is to be a member of it, in his own right.

Shamir is thought to be very satisfied with the troika which he heads. All three of them are comparable, in their hawkish outlooks. All three of them got their jobs more because of their capacities, then because of support for them in the party machinery or the party branches. All three are introspective and unemotional. None is the sort of politician who looks at himself each morning in the mirror and asks whether he is gaining ground or slipping.

Shamir does not feel inclined to expand the troika, and let a fourth man in who worries about his public image. It does not make for tranquil, smooth government.

Shamir also does not want populists or politicians whose ambitions are always showing to be too close to him. He would certainly not want to see Levy succeeding him one day, but rather Arens, who is 13 years older than Levy, the "baby" among the Herut ministers, at 45.

The fact that Levy talks a politically dovish language is not the reason why the other seven Herut ministers have ganged up against him. He has set his sights on getting the premiership, sooner or later. Since his potential rivals talk a hawkish language, he has to establish a contrary image. If Minister without Portfolio Ariel Sharon for any reason were suddenly to change into a superdove, Levy would turn into a superhawk.

Levy's seven opponents want to keep him in his place because his political style is not in harmony with the traditions of the "fighting family" (as the inner core of Herut veterans is called) any more than is the political style of Sharon. With all their awareness of Levy's value to the party, they want him to wait his turn and not jump the queue.

Levy's problem is that he does not want to wait another 10 year until both Shamir and Arens have had their turn at the tiller. He believes, moreover, that political advancement should not depend on age, seniority or membership in the Irgun Zvai Leumi underground which dissolved when he was only 10

(Continued from Page One) close to Shamir," who were spreading hostile stories about him in the media and intimating that he would not get the post.

Levy, in effect, challenged Shamir to disavow these nameless "sources" and to give him the portfolio; otherwise, he would "draw the appropriate conclusions."

The prime minister is understood to have been deeply angered by Levy's recourse to the media for the second time in one week. Last Friday, just hours before Shamir returned home from the U.S., Israel Radio reported that Levy was annoyed at not having been sent cabled reports of the talks with President Ronald Reagan during the week. Shamir upbraided him for this at the cabinet on Sunday.

Indeed, that upbraiding was interpreted by some political observers — and possibly by Levy himself — as a signal that Shamir did not intend to make Levy foreign minister. These observers noted that the premier, who is also foreign minister, had pointedly not named Levy acting foreign minister, as well as acting premier, while he (Shamir) was in Washington.

Shamir has never confirmed Levy's repeated claim that there is an "understanding" between them over the Foreign Ministry. He has certainly never acknowledged an outright commitment on his part to name Levy to the post.

Yet, one of Levy's foremost political supporters. Michael Kleiner MK (Likud-Herut), asserted in a radio interview vesterday that the premier's commitment had been made "unequivocally."

He said it had been made in a conversation between the two men immediately after their contest in the Herut Central Committee over the premiership in September, following Menachem Begin's resignation.

As regards Levy's "going public" and the embarrassment this had caused to the party and government. Kleiner said it was far more honourable to speak out openly then through anonymous

At the Herut ministers' meeting yesterday, according to informed sources. Shamir won a staunch show of support. The ministers are understood to have shared the premier's view that Levy had hurt the party by his behaviour. (Minister without Portfolio Ariel Sharon was not present since he is abroad.)

The informed sources said Levy was asked to attend the meeting, but despite several telephoned invitations he preferred to stay away.

Opinions were divided among political observers as to Levy's motives. Some felt he actually seeks to precipitate early elections, calculating that his political strength can only decline in the present situation. These observers believe that an outright rebellion by Levy could bring the government Another view was that Levy.

Universities' representative accuses Orgad of 'blackmail'

By CHARLES HOFFMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

The head of the university coordinating committee, legal expert Prof. Yoram Dinstein, has accused the Treasury of blackmailing the universities by refusing to release funds unless they agree to a massive budget cut.

Dinstein, rector of Tel Aviv University, said in an interview vesterday that "Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad is practising blackmail. He is holding up IS4.5 billion owed to us in this year's budget until we agree to cut our budget by 8 per cent for next year. This is blackmail.

Earlier this week, the heads of the universities rejected the Treasury demand and re-affirmed their earlier decision to close their doors next Tuesday due to mounting deficits.

Dinstein said that an injection of IS2b. now would enable the universities to stay open. "But once they amount to get them open again; because suppliers will have to b paid before they resume services." He said that since last week the heads of the universities have requested an urgent meeting with Prime Minister Shamir to seek his intervention but have not received a

The head of the prime minister's bureau, Yehiel Kadishai, said vesterday that a meeting among-Shamir, the universities and (1947) Treasury would be scheduled ear next week. The heads of the universities are due to meet again on Sunday to discuss the situation.

The Treasury spokesman saidthat the funds for this year have for been released because the universities did not implement the cuts they were supposed to make in last year's budget (1982/83). As for the "blackmail" charge, the spokesman said that "it is not our practice to descend to this level of argument in close, it will take at least twice that the media."

Reprimand for Israel Bonds agent in U.S.

By AARON SITTNER Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Israel Bonds Organization office in Jerusalem yesterday afternoon had still not been informed of the legal troubles that had struck the organization's underwriter in the U.S., the Development Corporation for Israel.

"This is the first I am hearing about it," Leo Krown, director of the organization's Israel office, told The Jerusalem Post in reply to a question.

On Tuesday, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission reprimanded the underwriter for failing to record properly some large cash transactions. The commission said Development Corporation for Israel had violated a rule of the Internal Revenue Service requiring financial institutions to report all eash transactions involving more than $10,000.

According to the SEC, when a client made a cash payment for Israel Bonds that exceeded $10,000, the money was recorded improperly as having been received over a period of days. For example, a $16,000 payment would be recorded as having been made in the form of $10,000 on one day and $6,000 on another day, apparently to avoid reporting the transaction to the

The SEC also discovered that Development Corporation for Israel's sales personnel was not recording all the information about customers as required by SEC rules. Admitting that "some of our staff members on occasion failed to comply with certain technical reporting requirements," the Development Corporation for Israel consented to the SEC's formal reprimand. It said an administrative settlement was reached to avoid the "effort and expense of litigation."

The reprimand covered a period of at least 16 months beginning January 1982.

Private builders present an ultimatum

The demands, contained in resolutions approved at the closing session of this week's convention of the Federation of Contractors and Builders, concern mainly nonresidential contract work the builders do for government and semi-public agencies.

The contractors want all payments due to them to be linked to the Consumer Price Index. They also want the period of payment to he shortened, and they demand a 21 per cent increment to all prices they had quoted in exisiting, signed contracts.

David Gatt, a federation official, said the contractors need a 15 per cent compensation for the higher costs of capital, and another 6 per "to compensate us for irregularities in the calculation of the Construction Inputs Index." This index, compiled by the Central Bureau of Statistics, tracks the changes in the price levels of labour, building materials, land and other components in the building trades. According to Gatt, "a large number of contractors" would face hankruptcy within six months unless the three demands are met. If the companies close down, he added. between 15,000 and 25,000 construction workers would have to be sacked.

David Stern, who was re-elected president of the federation, said": In the 1966 recession, more than 16,000 building workers were lost to the trade, and never returned. We must not allow this to happen again. If there is a drop in demand for new flats, let the government order construction of old-age homes, to unburden our hospitals of their geriatic patients, and new roads, to accommodate the burgeoning number of automobiles on our roads.

"If the building industry comes to a standstill again, it will be a national catastrophe!"

UN panel condemns Israel over unreleased terrorist

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — A UN committee voted Wednesday to condemn Israel for allegedly violating a prisoner-exchange agreement and holding back Ziyad Abu Ain serving a life term for killing two persons in a terrorist attack four years ago.

The General Assembly's Special Political Committee demanded that Israel immediately release Abu Ain, and ensure his transfer to Algeria "in conformity with the agreement reached through the good offices of the International Committee of the Red Cross." The vote on the resolution was 75-3, with 30 abstentions. Israel, the U.S. and Canada voted

Abu Ain had been held since 1982 for a terrorist bombing that killed two and wounded 36 in Tiberias in 1979. After the attack he fled to the U.S., and Israel was only able to bring him back for trial after lengthy proceedings in U.S. courts.

Sources involved in the negotiations and in the exchange said Abu Ain's name had been included in the original PLO list. However, in transcribing his name for the final checks his name had been misspelt. The resulting confusion was exploited by the Israeli security authorities, who removed him from a bus at Ben-Gurion Airport and returned him to prison.

In another action Wednesday, the Special Political Committee voted 112-2 to demand that Israel not proceed with a project for piping Mediterranean Sea water downhill to the Dead Sea to produce hydroelectric power.

'Soviets will resume talks on nuclear arms'

Soviet Union, having a "clear interest" in arms control, will end yesterday's suspension of negotiations on intercontinental nuclear weapons next year and return to the bargaining table, an official of the administration of President Ronald Reagan said yesterday.

The most recent suspension is an attempt by the Soviets to put pressure on public opinion in West Europe and the U.S., said the official who declined to be identified. "This clearly is what is behind Soviet behaviour today," he said.

Bonn minister indicted for bribe-taking

BONN (AP). - The Bonn prosecutor filed bribery charges yesterday against Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff, accusing him of accepting DM135,000 (about IS4.5 million) from the Flick holding company in exchange for tax breaks.

In a heated exchange in parliament on Wednesday, Chancellor Helmut Kohl rejected opposition party demands that Lambsdorff resign. Kohl also blasted the Bonn prosecutor for publicizing the case before the charges were filed, calling the tactic a "monstrosity."

Lambsdorff is alleged to have accepted payments and channelled the money to the Free Democrats in exchange for giving favourable tax rulings on Flick's profits from the 1975 sale of Daimler-Benz automotive stock.

Lambsdorff, whose party is the junior coalition partner of Kohl's Conservatives, reacted to news of his indictment without surprise. During a budget speech yesterday in parliament, the minister said he tends to be "an optimist in all situations in life." (AP, Reuter)

Haifa's hope

TEL AVIV. - The new league leaders Hapoel Tel Aviv travel to Haifa tomorrow, while their closest challengers Betar Jerusalem appear at the Winter Stadium in Ramat Gan against the third-place local Hapoel.

At least 10,000 fanatical Haifa fans are expected to turn out at the Kiryat Eliezer stadium to cheer on Zhai Armeli making his debut as a regular Maccabi Haifa player. On the other hand, Dov Remler, Shabtai Levi, Moshe Sinai and Rifat Turk all have a knack of producing goals just when it matters, and this game is likely to provide the home defence with a tough test.

Haifa reserve keeper Avi Ran was outstanding in last week's 0:0 draw against Bnei Yehuda, but the Haifa attack of Selektor, Rosenthal and Malka failed to show muchcohesion. On form, one cannot see the Tel Avivians going home pointless — except that Armeli is a striker who may make all the difference. The two surprise teams of the season, Hapoel Lod and Betar Jerusalem, should provide a great game. While Lod have shown real grit and have relied on opportunist goals by Buzaglo and Zeitoun, Betar have played some class football: inan interesting clash of styles, any result is possible.

That means that If try to buy as near the 15th and he first of each month as we can, ernating credit cards. That way "get 19 to 20 days' credit, and to-Efficy that's a lot of money."

However, no one really seemed DUTS (H) re this week just how the creditall in an inflationary economy. ready there's a real problem with acard purchases, since Isracard d a contract with its clients that quired 60 days' notice before any anges could be made in the tem. The business of belt-tightening

By D'VORA BEN SHAUL / Jerusalem Post Reporter

"I have a freezer," said Margalit Lotan, mother of two pre-schoolage children, whose husband is a mechanic. "I buy almost everything between the third and fifth of the month. That way I get more of what we need for my money, I also try to pay in cash or in one check, to save extra bank transactions. I pay all my bills with one cheque at the hish bank, the express system."

But it was clear this week that this sort of maneuvering is nothing more than a temporary reprieve, and that like an aspirin, the effect soon wears off and the toothache is still there. The shopkeepers and the shoppers of Israel know that the real change is in the amount and the variety of purchases being made. Israelis are becoming much more careful about where and and how they spend.

One of the most significant signs grocers no longer give gredit:

Shimon Ben-Hamu, in Jerusalem's German Colony, shrugged as he explained: "We can't afford monthly accounts any longer. It's hard to say this to a customer of 10 years overall, but it's a fact. My profit is never more than 20 per cent overall, and if 17 per cent of that is eaten up by the month's delay in payment, then how can I operate?"

How indeed? For Ben-Hamu also knows that the one binding tie between the customer and the local shop is the credit. If one has to pay cash, then why not shop in the market? A number of grocers expressed the feeling that a lot of corner groceries would be closing down in the coming months.

Yehuda Street, in Jerusalem, the manager spoke of the sale of

IN A PERFUMERY on Ben-

"Yes," she said; "women are still buying cosmetics, but they aren't buying as much or as freely. Few women come in now and ask for an item by a brand name; they're more likely to compare the various brands, checking the amount of the contents and the price before buying. They also tend to buy what's on sale on the counter rather than from the shelf." In Tel Aviv's Dizengoff, Lise Eldin, who owns (Lisa) the Lisa Perfumery, said that the same was

"People are cutting down on expenditure. A woman who usually buys rail lacquer in all colours now buys just two and mixes them to get a third shade. Also, some of the less expensive brands of moisture cream and make-up are becoming more true in Tel Aviv.

In the boutiques, sales staff report that there's a going business in accessories belis, scarves, costume jewelry, coloured stockings... but not many sales of dresses. Rina Rosner in Jerusalem said

Women are buying things that make an old dress look new. The boutiques are hard hit, too, because of the late winter. No one thinks of real winter clothing while it's shirtsleeve weather. By the time the winter comes, either they'll decide to make do with what they have, or the sales will already be on."

The decreasing purchase of clothing also extends to the specialty shops dealing in bridal attire, where owners say that rentals of wedding-gowns are up, but actual sales are down.

"A woman likes to think she'll keep her wedding-dress for her children," said one shop-owner, "but in the end, a lot are settling for a rented dress, as the families try to pare down the expenses for the

In the Tel Aviv and Jerusalem halls, where weddings, bar mitzvas and other festivities are catered, there's an increasing demand for buffets with wine and cheese, or light snacks and punch, but fewer sit-down dinners are being ordered.

Book-stores, too, are feeling the slump, particularly the large firms dealing in new books. But the shops selling used paper backs seem to be doing fairly well.

'There's a drop, no doubt about it," said an employee of The Bookstop in Jerusalem, which specializes in secondhand paperbacks. "But all in all, people are reading a lot." One customer remarked that the paperbacks were her "week's supply of tranquil-

THIS FEELING seems to extends to the entertainment field, theatres and cinemas reporting little if any decline in audiences. In a sort of "bread and circuses" mentality, most people seem to feel that their entertainment shekels are some of the most well-spent, and children's tickets to the "Children's Song Festival" were being snapped up this week at IS900 each,

Nor do the seilers of lottery tickets, soccer-pool cards and the like seem to be complaining.

"It's like this," said Eli Mahouti, who apparently hasn't lost any of his regular customers for lottery tickets at his stand in Jerusalem's Katamon neighbourhood. "When you don't know how you're going to manage in any case, then what's a few shekels to buy a chance of a million or more? People always think that maybe a miracle will happen." But there were no miracles in sight for Amnon Schori, who stood next to me at the office of the Government Employment Service. Aged 26, he is a semi-skilled construction worker who was laid off last week.

"I don't know what we'll do," said Schori, whose wife Ilana works as a checker in a supermarket, earning IS13,000 a month. "Ilana's salary barely covers the nurseryschool fees for our two children and part of the groceries. Schori is looking for a job, and will be collecting unemployment insurance for the next four to five months, if he can't find work. But the insurance is far less than what he earned, and as it was, they were scarcely getting by on that.

ANOTHER indication of the pinch was the appearance of the avocado farmers at the high-rise apartment buildings in Tel Aviv, where they were selling their own avocados at IS25 per kilo. The market price is 1S50-60, but the grower only gets 186-8 per kilo. In an attempt to keep affoat, many moshav farmers decided to sell the fruit themselves - a gamble, because some were bound to be caught and fined for illegal marketing.

The same was true of sellers of other luxury items such as iceberg lettuce and mushrooms. One woman in Tel Aviv said she had bought almost all her fruit and vegetables last week from farmers who were selling door to door.

A veteran avocado grower from the coastal plain who refused to allow his name to be used said that unless a farmer sells at least 10 to 15 per cent of his produce without going through the middlemen, he cannot stay in business.

"I'm not speaking of a profit on the farm, or even a minimum wage for the farmer," he stressed. "Just paying the overheads and keeping the place going,"

At two Jerusalem petrol stations, one on King David Street the other at Kiryat Hayovel, there was business as usual this week, with about the same amount of turnover as last month. But at the entrance to the city and at the station in Sha'ar Hagai there was a slump, indicating that possibly more people are opting for inter-urban travel by public transport.

ANOTHER group hard hit by the credit squeeze and the rate of inflation are free-lance translators and writers. Many of them have stopped taking assignments from the universities or the government, since they usually have to wait for payment in shekels without linkage, for about 90 days. Even when pay is linked to the dollar, postal delays cause a

One free-lance writer mentioned that she was owed $200 by a magazine that is exemplary in its prompt payment. Payment, however, is in shekels. She put in her bill on November 12, and a cheque for the shekel equivalent at 87 shekels to the dollar was mailed to her on the 19th. When the cheque arrived on November 30, the rate was already 1895 to the dollar. She had lost IS1,600 in buying power.

Looking at the situation and realizing that it's only the beginning, Sheila Oholiav, 38, a working mother of three, said that she had no real plan for the future.

"In fact, those who tell me that they have seem unreal to me. In the end, I think it's wishful thinking. What we're really doing is just muddling through - us, the government, everyone. Just muddling through and hoping that somewhere we'll succeed."

There is no doubt that Gale is leaving the White House on a high note in American-Israeli ties. The widely publicized talk of closer strategic cooperation between Washington and Jerusalem in the aftermath of President Ronald Reagan's summit with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has underscored this closer alliance.

The opposite, of course, was the case when Gale joined the White House team only a month after Israel's move into Lebanon.

Gale's last official undertaking as liaison to the Jewish community was to organize Reagan's Hanukka candle-lighting ceremony at the Jewish Community Centre of Greater Washington on December

Reagan's record on Israel

By WOLF BLITZER / Post Washington Correspondent

Naturally, it was an opportunity for Reagan to score some points with the Jewish community. Politicians are usually anxious to do exactly that, especially as new elections draw nearer.

Indeed, sceptics will argue that the improved U.S.-Israeli relationship would have occurred no matter what policies Israel might have adopted in recent weeks or what developments might have unfolded in the Middle East. Presidential election years in the U.S. always tend to be good for American-

WHILE THERE certainly is a lot of truth in that, there is also no doubt that other factors were even more critical in turning around the U.S.-

Israeli relationship this time.
Israel, today, is needed by a Washington anxious to get the marines out of Lebanon. Closer ties with Israel are viewed as absolutely essential in this regard. Thus, the relationship would have improved even if new elections were not just over the horizon.

'The president views Israel in a very positive light," Gale said. "He. really believes that Israel is a strong and vital ally. Strategically, (Israel) can be of great assistance to the United States.'

Gale did not, however, try to conceal the fact that there are still differences between the U.S. and Israel. Referring to the Reagan peace plan, he said. "The president has proposed a peace initiative. It is still on the table. It is still alive. No party to the conflict has been willing to come to the negotiating table under its auspices, but we're still optimistic and hopeful that we can find a formula to get Jordan and Israel to the negotiating table. We're going to continue to look to find ways to do that."

Still, Gale agreed that resolving the problems in Lebanon had taken a more immediate priority. "The president has said that our efforts in Lebanon are going to be a key factor in the ultimate success of the broader peace process and that if we're successful in Lebanon, there will be greater opportunities for success in the broader peace

"If we're unsuccessful in Lebanon, our chances of success in the broader peace process are going to be diminished. So I think we're going to look at Lebanon and we're going to look at the broader peace

GALE AND OTHER Republican leaders, at the same time, are also looking at the elections in November 1984.

Assuming Reagan wants a second term, he will make a major effort to secure Jewish votes, which could be decisive in a close vote. "In the 1980 elections," Gale said, "we won 42 per cent of the Jewish vote. It was a high watermark for a Republican candidate." Since the days of Franklin Roosevelt, most Jews have voted Democrat. Gale believes Reagan can do at least as well in the Jewish community next year - maybe

MUCH, OF COURSE, will depen on the Democratic candidate. Walter Mondale, for example, is clearly more popular among Jews than John Glenn. "I think that Ronald Reagan has a record which he can run on very well in the Jewish community, Gale said. "I think the Jewish community has to look at the record in its entirety, not in a vacuum. There are a lot of things that the Jewish community is not aware of that this Reagan Administration has done

Asked to elaborate, Gale referred to the increase in U.S. economic and military assistance for Israel in the past three years: "I'm not sure many American Jews understand that when Ronald Reagan came to office in 1981, total foreign aid to Israel was at the $1.7 billion level. Today, it is at $2.6 billion. That's a substantial increase."

Gale also referred to the whole area of unpublicized political, military and intelligence cooperation between the two countries exchanges of information, ideas, dialogues that the world isn't aware of and doesn't really need to be

"You don't have to do everything in public to be a good friend and to have a special relationship. As a matter of fact, some things are more successful when you can have an exchange of ideas in private.

"If they ask me my advice as to the theme of the next campaign," Gale continued, "I will say that basically the U.S.-Israei relationship is better today than it was when Ronald Reagan took office, and that while, yes, there have been ups and downs, the fundamental bedrock relationship is better today. In short, the U.S.-Israeli relationship is thriving."

American Jews do not vote simply because of Israel. Like all Americans, they also consider other issues. But assuming U.S.-Israeli ties are still as good in 11 months as they are today, that probably will do wonders for the president's votegetting appeal in the Jewish community.

THE REAL TEST, one can suppose, will be whether the Israel Army Censor allows this article, or the study it is based on, to be translated and distributed in the West Bank.

Judging by some of the examples and the conclusions of Dr. Meron Benvenisti's just-published survey of "Israeli Censorship of Arab Publications," conducted under the auspices of the New York-based Fund for Free Expression, the chances are not great.

After all, as Benvenisti's random sample shows, the censor prohibits the publication of death notices in which a Palestinian family "in the homeland and in the diaspora" mourns the passing of one of its

If that makes him produce his triangular "Prohibited" stamp, how will he react to a study that not only reproduces what he has specifically barred from publication, but also concludes: "Despite the pervasiveness of censorship, the censors - like their counterparts throughout history — are fighting a losing battle," adding that their struggle "is particularly pathetic, because of the proliferating technology of communication from Arab states that penetrates the West Bank and because of the emergence of new and powerful intellectual centres in the West Bank itself?"

CENSORSHIP of Arab publications is merely another aspect of the struggle between Israel and the Palestinians. Both sides value words and ideas as powerful weapons: both see themselves as beleagured minorities and both consider censorship a method of denying the other side legitimacy.

"Legitimacy — or the perception of legitimacy — is what is at stake," Benvenisti notes. The primary concerns of the military censor (when it comes to the West Bank or Gaza) are not to suppress national security secrets and ideological tracts but rather to "eradicate expression that could foster Palestinian nationalist feelings or which suggests that Palestinians are a nation with a national heritage. Concomitantly, expression denying Israeli legitimacy or imputing behaviour to Israeli officials that suggests illegitimacy is eliminated by the cen-

Conversely, the Arab press attempts to assert precisely what the censor would prohibit. "It is a mobilized press and its editors with no exceptions but with varied emphasis — attempt to express Palestinian nationhood and to question Israeli legitimacy."

BENVENISTI was prompted to undertake the censorship survey by New York Times columnist Anthony Lewis, who noted that the censor was banning well-known titles of world literature such as George Orwell's 1984. The 166-page study covers censorship of the Arabic press, as well as the censorship of books. There is also a brief but useful review of press freedom in Goren of the Hebrew University. The Arabic papers have based themselves in Jerusalem partly in order to "enjoy" the same laws the Israeli press is subject to. Nonetheless, there is an immense difference in practice.

Israel proper and a survey of the relevant legislation, by Dr. Dina

Censorship-press relations in the Israeli press are governed by a voluntary system of self-censorship which reflects a basic national consensus. "The subjects on which censorship applies are defined; there is a mechanism for appeal and a Knesset committee to supervise the process. This voluntary agreement." Benvenisti stresses based on mutual trust, does not apply to the Arabic press."

The Arabic press "perceive themselves as situated in the forefront of the national struggle against the occupation... Their 'advocacy journalism' is reflected in the choice of news items, choice of phrase, and even in the contents of their advertisements."

Benvenisti's conclusions in this respect are largely based on a symposium on the role of the Palestinian press in the West Bank published in February 1980 by the ordanian daily al-Dustour.

"The Israeli authorities accept the self-image of the Arabic press at face value, but carry it ad absurdum," he says. Quoting an affidavit submitted to the High Court of Justice in 1982 by the government responding to a suit brought by one of the Arabic papers, he says that "for the censor, the nationalist stance of the Arabic papers means the 'Palestinian covenant, the destruction of the State of Israel, refusal to recognize the national existence of the Jewish people and its national rights' and that their style is merely a 'secret call for armed

THE ARABIC press is also subject. to dual censorship since, apart from the regular Israeli laws, the military government may also cancel distribution permits in the West Bank and Gaza. It also requires the frequent renewal of such permits and numerous editors and journalists have been detained or placed under lengthy terms of town arrest. One editor was expelled to Jordan.

Editors in the Arabic press routinely prepare at least 25 per cent more material than they can print because they know the censor is liable to kill some of their items. All copy, including advertisements and photographs, has to be submitted, and the papers are not allowed to leave blank space. If they are pressed for time, they usually fill the space with an announcement saying, "We apologize," Perhaps the censor himself ought to be signing that announcement. Nonetheless, "it is ironic that, under Israeli rule, the Arab press enjoys a degree of prosperity it never previously experienced," the survey notes, probably reflecting the generally acknowledged shot in the arm the Israeli occupation gave to flagging Palestinian nationalism in the United Hashemite Kingdom prior to 1967.

There are three dailies with circulation runs of from 10,000 to 15,-000 for al-Quds, 3,000 to 5,000 for al-Fair and 2,000 to 3,000 for a-Sha'ab. All appear in an eight-page format. In addition, there are five weeklies (some with circulations of up to 15,000), four bi-weeklies and monthlies and numerous irregular

Benvenisti's study was based on a survey of a sample of censored articles taken from the files of al-Fajr between May 1982 and April 1983,

40 randomly selected items from a-Sha'ab, six articles from the bimonthly a-Shir'a and some censored items from the English weekly

If there is a weakness in this survey, it is that the statistics provided do not have any direct bearing on the conclusions. Since the samples are unequal, a table of the distribution of censored items by subject and paper cannot lead to any firm conclusion. Nor does a table of censored items analysed according to source of the report reveal anything significant.

HOWEVER, a sample of the translations of some of the centored items is astounding. Why would an intelligent person bother to censor an item recording "the release of Adal'el Khalil of Nablus after two months' detention?" Why should readers of the Arabic papers not know that French communists "favour an international conference in solidarity with the Palestinian people" or that 100,000 Israelis demonstrated against the war in Lebanon (an article drawn from the Hebrew daily Al-Hamishmar)?

Does an item from an Israel Radio news bulletin reporting that a member of an Egyptian medical delegation complained that $15,000 was stolen from his room constitute a threat to Israeli security and legitimacy? Do items based on reports from the Arabic service of Radio Monte Carlo, freely heard all over the West Bank, become intolerably inciting when seen in written form by the few thousand readers of al-Fajr or a-Sha'ab?

To be sure, there are items, like the poem commemorating the "tenth year of martyrdom" of Ali Tahawe, who was killed during the 1972 terrorist attack on Lod airport, which would make most censors reach for their stamps or pencils.

But surely items reporting a conference on the preservation of Palestinian history in Tunis, the resignation of Menahem Milson as head of the civil administration or the despatch of French troops to join the multinational force in Beirut do not warrant the same

FOLLOWING the fiasco surrounding the censorship of books initiated by Anthony Lewis' articles. the censor issued a revised master list of censored books in September 1982. This list contains 1,002 titles. and although some 600 titles have been added subsequently, the original list served as the sample for Benvenisti's survey.

Since 1977, there has been a phenomenal increase in the import opening of the border with Egypt. In 1981, 21,432 titles were imported. Of these only 3 or 4 per cent were censored, but Benvenisti notes that they "represent 100 per cent of all works that express, instill, or foster Palestinian-Arab national feelings and national heritage."

Benvenisti stresses that his study is ex post facto and that no attempt has been made to interview the censors on their intentions, but rather to examine their motivations through their actions.

Here the statistics provide useful guidelines. It appears that the name of a publishing house already gives the censor an indication of content without requiring him to read the books - hence the disporportionate number of banned titles from the PLO Research Centre which used to exist in Beirut, and a communist publishing house, A-Tali'a.

"The high percentage of fiction and poetry works censored (25.6 per cent), and the large number of poets and novelists censored point to the importance the censor attaches to that type of literature. This is not surprising, since poetry is traditionally a means of expressing nationalist feelings." Benvenisti

ALMOST all translations into Arabic are of anti-Israeli and anti-Semitic works and the title of the translation has usually been sufficient to ban the book. Israel Should be Eliminated. The Jewish Threat and Christopher Marlowe's The Jew of Malia are examples.

The sample chosen by Benvenisti was reviewed by two Israeli experts in Arabic literature and by a Druse poet and lawyer. The sample was chosen by author and by subject. and each reviewer was given an hour per title (said to correspond to the average time the censor spends inspecting a book).

Their conclusions were that "the censor is systematic, consistent and knowledgeable. Although he may censor titles because of a single sentence, one can understand his concerns, which are not arbitrary."

Books which included Nasserism, Zionism and Palestine in the title or which connect Zionism with imperialism or communism are banned, as are translations which include an offensive phrase in the Arabic introduction.

The censor also forbids the import or local publication of any book dealing with Arab partisan perceptions of controversial issues, even if the work is a serious study in geography, history or Judaism. Any book that projects Israel as a product of imperialism, denies the right of Israel to exist, questions the sanctive of the Bible or Jewish morality or describes israeli weakness in war or cruelty is band ned. So are works depicting Israel from the marxist point of views stating there is a chance that Israel will be destroyed, including Islamic fundamentalist rejection of Western values or glorifying Arab leaden who fought israel.

ANY POETRY or fiction connected even indirectly and symbolically with Palestine is banned The censor's "all or nothing" perceptions of the conflict are clearly reflected in his decisions, Benvenisti concludes. "He genuinely believes that one can stifle nationalist feelings by preventing the reading of works that directly of indirectly indicate that such nationalism exists."

Here too, Benvenisti supplies some examples and, while most clearly fit into the censor's categories of what should be banned, there are also puzzling exercises of his power. A book published in Cairo in 1958, dealing with contemporary world problems: is described by the reviewers as "matter-of-fact and exhaustive." In the chapter discussing the Gulf of Akaba and the Sinai Camapign, Israeli actions are described as "aggressive" and tied to the aims of England and France.

The invasion of Sinai is acknowledged as difficult because of the problem of transportation and supply in the desert and Israel's plans are described as "secret," at they surely must have been. The headline of the chapter is also pretty mild — "Israel's plots."

"Otherwise there is nothing worth censoring in this book," the reviewers conclude.

ISRAELIS and Palestinians are engaged in a "zero-sum game" Benvenisti concludes. "The fulfilment of the other's national identity is perceived by each group at equivalent to the destruction of its own identity."

The Israeli censor, suffering like his compatriots from the 'besieger minority syndrome,' sees the men publication of a nationalist Palesti nian paper, irrespective of its con tents, as a provocation; and one sided reporting of events in the ter ritories as 'emphasizing violence against Israel and the militar government, non-recognition o Israel and provocation against it?

"The struggle over censorship will persist, as the struggle ove legitimacy will persist, until both sides abandon the view that they are engaged in a game that only one cal

WHEN THE campaign to release the Mosley papers began modestly earlier this year, few people gave it any chance of succeeding. It just sounded like a good gimmick. Indeed, even one of the organizers told me that he didn't think that it had "a cat in hell's chance" of getting anywhere.

But it has. At the beginning of November, the Home Office relented and agreed to the release of a large batch of papers that had been held back from public view for about 20 years (in Britain, official papers are usually released after 30 years),

Not all, however, have been released and at a meeting at the House of Commons on Wednesday. the organizers of the campaign made it clear that they would not rest until everything relating to this period of British history was

Norman Atkinson, a Labour MP. who presided at the meeting, said there was a strong suspicion that those papers still being held back dealt with relations between the British Fascist leader Oswald Mosley and the royal family.

Stan Newens, who lost his seat as a Labour MP in the June election and who has been the key figure in the research side of the issue, expressed increasing concern in general about "unnecessary and unjustified secrecy over public records. The situation is totally unsatisfactory, and Britain compares very unfavourably with the situation in other democratic countries."

The Mosley mystery

By HYAM CORNEY / Post London Correspondent

This theme was taken up by another Labour MP, veteran lan Mikardo, a Jew and a Zionist, who has represented East End constituencies in the House of Commons for many years and who can remember the activities of Mosley and his Fascists in their battles against the Jews. "Of all the democracies in the world," Mikardo declared, "Britain is the one country in which access to public information is the least readily available. Secrecy is carried to lengths that would simply not be tolerated in other democracies."

THE PAPERS released so far relate to the activities of Mosley's British Union of Fascists between 1934 and 1937. According to Newens, who has made a detailed study of them, they reveal that "powerful sections of the British establishment" wanted to make peace with Hitler. "It is not Mosley who was being protected by the records being kept closed," Newens said. "A whole group of the British establishment was prepared to come to terms with Hitler, and after the war, they preferred that their past views should be forgotten. "Today, people tend to forget that many people in the Conservative Party and in the establishment were prepared to make a deal with Hitler. They were prepared to come to terms with him even as late as the early years of the war. There is a very important job to be done fairs. There is a great deal about Mosley and the Fascists which still has to be brought to light.

There are lessons to be drawn today from these issues if we are to take an intelligent approach to current problems such as whether it is wise to support Fascist governments as alternatives to communist

One aspect of the Mosley period that particularly interests those in the campaign to release the papers, is the links between Lord Rothermere of the Daily Mail and Lord Beaverbrook of the Daily Express. Once political allies within the short-lived United Empire Party of 1930, they parted wher Beaverbrook returned to the Torand developed his relationship with the ultra-right. But the two remained firm friends, and in May 1934. Rothermere warned Mosley that Dally Mail support for his British Union of Fascists would be threatened if Mosley continued to attack Beaverbrook.

THE ORGANIZERS of the campaign say they are convinced that files have been withheld because they give the lie to the frail myth that the vast majority of the establishment were hostile to Mosley's politics. The reverse, they say, is possibly nearer to the truth. They will continue to press for the release of all the remaining files.

HOW HAS the U.S. media reacted to the latest escalation of American involvement in Lebanon? In short, there has been a predictable response, covering the entire spectrum of opinion.

Some major newspapers, columnists and television commentators have welcomed the new get-tough U.S. approach towards Syria. Others, of course, have bitterly complained, urging the U.S. to pull its forces out of Lebanon immediately. Still others have taken a middle course. The Wall Street Journal, for example, was among the most outspoken in applauding to use American air power against Syrian positions in Lebanon.

An editorial on Tuesday said Reagan's "announced policy of administration to remove the marines from Lebanon immediately. Referring to the air strike on Sunday, Kraft wrote: "The lesson is that, after striking back hard, the U.S. must pull the marines from Beirut in the interests of its more serious international business.'

According to Kraft, the U.S. has two major commitments in the region: "American power is required to offset the Russians in the whole area," he said. "It is also needed to reassure the conservative Arab monarchies and sheikdoms against the threat posed by the Iranian revolution. But those responsibilities are best served by standing slightly aloof, on the ready to come in as a balancing factor."

Broader global interests are endangered by investing so much U.S. prestige and military muscle in Lebanon. Thus, Kraft concluded. "the paramount requirement is to move the marines out of Beirut in short order. For their continued presence as hostages to the crazies of world politics is fundamentally incompatible with international security."

Columnist Flora Lewis, writing in The New York Times, urged Reagan to immediately open a dialogue with the Soviet Union to try to calm down the Syrians. "Mr. Assad does run a bloody regime, and Lebanon might have a chance to find some formula for domestic reconciliation if he would permit it," she said. "But that is not a reason to stagger on towards utter tragedy in the vain hope of reforming him. The new U.S. mission in Lebanon is unrealistic. The time to stop, parlay and back away is now."

She raised the spectre of America and the Soviet Union being dragged into a direct conflict: "The most serious failing of Reagan administration foreign policy has been the rupture of substantive talks with Moscow. But it isn't too late."

DIFFERENT approach was taken by The Washington Post. I urged the administration to keep its attention focused on solving the political problems in Lebanon, And that, the newspaper said, could not be done by only using military

"Given the formidable internal and external obstacles, it was never going to be easy to achieve a Lebanese settlement. But a heavy burden rests on American policymakers to keep the common focus on a Lebanese negotiation and to seek ways to work with Syria, and Israel, on the outer circle.

'As long as Washington is still in the game, the marines should remain, and while they remain, their tormentors cannot be accorded intmunity. It cannot be forgotten, however, that it is not just American toughness and determination that are being tested, it is also American sophistication and diplomatic skill." The New York Times said the U.S.

has finally "absorbed some important lessons of recent Middle East diplomacy." It cited the following points: "Saudi Arabia, for all its wealth and 'moderation,' is a weak reed... Jordan's King Hussein will not risk his throne for anything more than informal coexistence with Israel... Syria will not soon be pushed or negotiated out of Lebanon... Israel will not again take heavy casualties except in defend of its territory... The Soviet Unit will have influence in the Middle East so long as there are Arabs covet its arms... Lebanon is acc coherent society that peace-keep troops, or any other kind, can me into a viable nation."

"But peace is more than end-of-belligerency - especially if your basic assumption is, as mine is, that we seek ultimately to become an integral part of this region." Premier Shamir, reviewing the Israel-Egypt situation in his talks in Washington, said the evolving quality of relations with Egypt was a yardstick of the maturity of the Arab world in general and its political preparedness to live in real peace with Israel. .

ON THE EGYPTIAN SIDE, the long months without meetings, without a high-level dialogue, have witnessed — some Israelis would say they caused --- agression in or hardening of policy-positions. Egypt now says, according to the senior Israeli official, that it will not resume the long-stalled autonomy talks without Jordan and the Palestinians also participating. This is a deviation from Egypt's original position (enshrined in a letter accompanying the peace treaty) that "In the event Jordan decides not to take part... the negotiations will be held by Israel and Egypt." Egyptian officials explain that two years of desultory talks on the autonomy scheme between Israel and Egypt alone proved fruitless. In addition, Egypt now indicates that it would agree to resume talking only on the basis of the Reagan Plan. President Reagan depicts the plan as an elaboration of Camp David: but Israel has rejected it as a material departure from the original agreement.

"I am personally convinced," says the Israeli official, "though I know there are other opinions here, that had the autonomy talks not been broken off, they would have produced an agreement. We were not all that far apart. I am sure there are many West Bank Palestinians today who regret that the negotiation lapsed."

BECAUSE OF the fear of the "cold peace" deep-freezing, says the senior official, "Israel ardently wants to improve the relationship." Despite the persistent coldshouldering - only this week Israeli exhibits were barred from a Cairo book fair - Jerusalem will keep trying, "but without crawling," the of-

Recently there have been mixed signs, and some new disappointments. In the summer, after the signing of the May 17 agreement with Lebanon, Israel awaited confidently the return of the Egyptian ambassador to Tel Aviv. Seemingly firm promises were transmitted, but the envoy failed to reappear.

Legal experts here say the 15month absence of an ambassador is merely a political one. After all, Egypt committed itself as part of the peace treaty package "to send a resident ambassador to Israel." A 15-month recall "for consultations" strains the legal test of reasonableness.

Meanwhile import licences have been lapsing one after another, and trade between the two countries is drying up. There have been hints recently, says the senior official, of a thaw both in trade and in Egyptian tourism to Israel. "But so far we didn't see it — and it is not for a lack of interest by businessmen on both sides."

ALSO ON the debit side is Egypt's sustained virulence in the tone and tenor of its rhetoric at the United Nations. An Egyptian delegate recently referred to Israeli 'concentration camps" in South Lebanon, though he must have known the special sensitivity of this term.

Israel for its part has not responded in kind. On the contrary, Israel made a point of voting in favour of Egypt's accession to the Security Council.

Regarding the non-military aspects of the peace treaty, the Israeli ambassador in Cairo and his staff continue to function - and continue to be shunned by many sectors of Egyptian society. There is no comparison, says the senior official, between the access that the Egyptian charge d'affaires here has to all areas of Israeli life - the government, the media, the arts, social circles - and the much more limited ambit in which the Israeli diplomats in Cairo operate.

Similarly, Prof. Shimon Shamir's Academic Centre in Cairo is still a going concern - but its area of outreach is also limited, mainly to Egyptians studying Hebrew or Israeli affairs.

Applying the cup metaphor to the normalization, says the senior official, it is three-quarters empty or one quarter full. More than 50 bilateral agreements were signed by the two countries, but most of them are inoperative at present.

The most hopeful sign of late was the invitation to David Kimche, Director-General of the Foreign Ministry, to visit Cairo early last month for talks with top officials there. Accompanied by the ministry's legal adviser, Elyakim Rubinstein, who has been involved in the peace process since its earliest days. Kimche spent three days discussing mainly these very issues of the "cold peace." He met with Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali. Minister of State Butros district's stand now is that the talks on Teha should resume as soon as possible - but in Jerusalem and Cairo, the two capitals

In the past this insistence on Jerusalem as a venue for the Taba talks seemed absent, or certainly less accented, in the Israeli position, Israel stressed instead that Taba talks must be part of a general resumption of the diplomatic dialogue between the two countries

The senior official says this second condition is still valid, too. But he emphasizes Jerusalem. Talks on Taba were held there many times before, he recalls, and Israel cannot now depart from that precedent. Granted, there were some talks on Tana held at Ismailiya last March, but they, says the official, conperned the interim arrangements at the disputed site, not the permanent solution, and thus they were held in the framework of the Israel-Egypt mixed coordission.

(Israel ever insisted on Jerusalem as a venue for the autonomic talks. But that was a special case because, according to the Egyptian position, Jerusalem was itself an issue in those talks.)

The senior official vigorously asserts that Israel has no wish to drag out the Taba affair, which has become a serious irritant in the relationship. On the contrary, he says, Israel, having invested a great deal of legal research and spadework, is more confident than ever of its case, and anxious to reach the "conciliation or arperation" procedure laid down in the peace treaty for resolution of disputes

THE AXE has been stayed; what is coming more and more into gues-

tion is the reality of Cohen-Orgad's economic policy. There is reason to believe, and the ulpanim is a case in point, that Orgad's determination to cut the operating budgets of government departments and agencies is as much a chimera as was Aridor's declaration of similar intent. So many things have happened in the past four months that it is easy to forget that Yoram Aridor was at the same point last August as Cohen-Orgad is today. Aridor, after more than half a year of obstinacy and dithering in the face of growing evidence of the total failure of his dollar-foolish attempt to contain inflation, finally made his U-turn, and called for major cuts in government budgets. He was outwitted by his ministerial colleagues, whose fiefdoms he was threatening.

Aridor was one of the most morose, abrasive characters ever to have made it to the top of the political heap in this country. Yet he was said to possess great power in Herut, due to his role in turning a potential Herut electoral debacle in 1981 into a narrow victory. That power did not help him get his way when he finally came to his economic sense last August.

Cohen-Orgad is in many ways Aridor's antithesis. He has been making the most dire economic prophesies but with a perpetual smile on his face. He is also given full credit for his courage in being nearly the only Herut member who openly criticized Aridor's economic madness before it was fashionable to do so. But he has none of Aridor's political clout. And he has been just as unsuccessful in getting his ministerial colleagues to change their profligate ways.

The economic atmosphere has changed, however, thanks to the crash of the bank share market in early October and to the major devaluation of the shekel that followed. Many Israeli families are feeling the economic pinch for the first time in years, and quite a number are hurting.

COHEN-ORGAD, as a savvy economist, would be the first to admit that although the economy cannot be out back on the tracks without a general reduction in the population's real standard of living, such a cutback by itself is economically pointless and politically suicidal.

Professional and academic economists who applauded the October devaluation were unanimous in noting that it should have been preceded by a major cut in government expenditure and by a social compact with the Histadrut that would have included a partial freeze on the compensatory cost-of-living payments to be paid. These same economists are today saying that the October devaluation was "wasted" as a mechanism for economic reform, and that subsequent inflation has already caught up with and wiped out nearly all the advantages that were supposed to accrue to our

As a professional economist, Cohen-Orgad knows this as well as most of his professional colleagues. his problem is persuading Prime Moniste, Yazhak Shamir, before he gets to his impending cabinet reshuffle, that what is needed is not a reshuffle but a basic upheaval in the compostion of the Likud-led government coalition and a major change in their suicidal habits.

In it the standard of living of 80 per cent of the population has been intered away by its leaders and had no impact whatever on reversing the downward spiral of the national economy.

When one considers that a Labour Party mesmerized with its own internal squabbling committed electoral suicide in 1977, is there any reason to believe that the Likud will not follow suit in 1984?

Four months later, the events of tober 23 provided a grim illustran of Spiegel's theme; the U.S. usal of Israeli offers of imdiately available treatment for marines wounded in the Beirut plosion that morning.

An hour-by-hour reconstruction of that tragic day, painstakingly prepared by Congressman James H. Scheuer of New York, revealed (as Scheuer wrote) that "during a 12hour period on Sunday, October 23, the Israelis repeatedly contacted American officials at every level possible with offers of assistance equipment, rescue teams and a firstclass hospital. No one took them up on the offer, despite the fact that the decision-makers in Beirut and in Washington knew, as that terrible day dragged on, that our evacuees were not going to reach definitive care hospitals in less than 10 to 23 hours..." (Baltimore Sun, November

Despite obfuscation and prevarication by members of the defence establishment - trenchantly described in Scheuer's article -the Washington policy-makers' decision to risk lives, certainly to increase and prolong suffering, among their own soldiers was indisputably dictated by a desire, as one Pentagon spokesman did let slip on October 24, "not to infuriate the Arabs." Fate thus cast a penetrating light on the totality of years'-long U.S. policy in the Middle East designed ostensibly to strengthen deterrence of Soviet penetration, but in fact governed by the principle of not "infuriating the Arabs," of appeasing and fawning upon them, of encouraging them to continue the flow of petrodollars...

BARELY SIX WEEKS after that bloody day in Beirut, Premier Yitzhak Shamir and Defence Minister Moshe Arens returned from meetings in Washington with President Ronald Reagan and his advisers, beaming with euphoric smiles and making encouraging statements about agreement reached on increased U.S. economic aid, on possible enhanced trade relations and - the crux of the agreement -- about providing for a degree of strategic consultation and cooperation (including the prepositioning of U.S. supplies in Israel). The whole agreement was enveloped in an unconcealed consensus on the common interest of Israel and the U.S. in deterring Syrian belligerence and blocking the expansion of Soviet power in

IN SHORT, an apparent reversal of U.S. policy. For seven years, Washington fostered the Syrian involvement which undermined Lebanese independence, transforming the Beirut government into a puppet of Damascus. It stretched out a protecting arm to the PLO which used Lebanon as a base for attacks on Israel's civilian population, established Lebanon as the central headquarters of international terror, and subjected its population to a reign of rapine and Washington worked to frustrate every Israeli effort to break the power of the PLO. It successfully pressed Israel in 1981 (at Arafat's behest) to stop its offensive against PLO bases, thus giving Arafat his breathing space to prepare, with Soviet aid, a new, massive offensive against Israel; and indubitably thus forced upon Israel the Peace for Galilee operation in 1982.

That operation laid the foundation - at great cost to Israel - for tremendous objective advantages for both Israel and the U.S. It destroyed the PLO base and structure; it established conditions for renewed Lebanese independence; it clipped the Syrian wings.

violent and anarchic business." A rational policy of cooperation with Israel in the fall of 1982 would

These gains were largely undermined by the application of traditional American policy dancing to the Saudi tune, urging the Lebanese president to distance himself from Israel, exerting pressure on Israel calculated to prevent the completion of its speedy have consolidated mutual gains and averted much suffering; and would arguably have ruled out the sending of U.S. marines to Beirut.

Such were the sins of Washington, compounded by a fatuous belief in a Saudi "moderating" influence on Damascus — and by recurrent pliancy of the Israeli government. Then, entangled in the web of Lebanese reality, horrendously illumined by the tragedy of October 23. Washington woke up to the fact that the only hope of credibly confronting Syrian ambitions was by forging a framework for cooperation with Israel, in belated recognition of the common interest in

IT IS, thus, no secret that the Washington agreement is an engagement of convenience, with a view to helping the U.S. out of the muddle into which it was landed by its obsessive traditional policy. But it is absurd and hypocritical to hint or pretend (as Labour Party spokesmen have done this week) that the proposed cooperation with the U.S. conflicts with Israeli interests. It is, an Israeli interest to prevent Syrian domination of Lebanon - which is but an instalment in its design to include all of Palestine, on both sides of Jordan in 'Greater Syria." It is an Israeli interest to have a peaceful, stable, independent and friendly Lebanon as a neighbour. If Washington has finally awakened to its own interest in these objectives, the people of Israel (including the Labour Party) may permit themselves to share in Shamir's and Arens' satisfaction at the Washington agreement; and to hope and pray that it will succeed in its purpose.

NOT FOR a moment, however, must it be forgotten that the American turnabout on Lebanon is "local" aberration from its traditional policy. It does not signal a change in Washington's attitude, unchanged for so many years and indeed obsessive, on the crucial issue of Israel's future. It persists in its intention to press Israel to withdraw to the 1949 Armistice Lines and bring about Arab rule in Judea, Samaria and Gaza. In the recent talks in Washington, too, Reagan did not forget to reiterate, albeit briefly, his expectations of "his" plan, nor to repeat the cliche that the "settlements" are an "obstacle to peace."

This laconic reference serves as a further reminder - and warning to Israel. There are now signs that the administration may find it possible to remove the Reagan Plan from the back burner before the presidential election. It depends on Hussein. There are signs that Hussein may succumb to American blandishments (including the promise that Israel will be subjected to immediate pressure to "freeze the settlements" and to agree to open the subject of Jerusalem.) He would then announce, with or without Arafat's consent, his willingness to negotiate. On the hasis, of course, of the Reagan Plan which Jerusalem has rejected as an invitation to suicide.

If this happens, the pursuit of the plan (with the slogan of "Reagan", the Peacemaker") could become a central theme in the Republicans' election campaign.

The vigour of such a campaign to which the Democrats would have no convincing reply in view of their own record - may be imagined.

A wise government in Jerusalem. instead of merely basking in the warmth currently flowing from Washington, would, even at this late hour, hasten to effect a drastic revision in its information policy; and pre-empt the administration's campaign by creating a belt of resistance to the Reagan Plan within the American community. Should Hussein again reject Washington's wooing, Israel will have more time to prepare such preemption.

The campaign for the shrinking of Israel will merely be postponed until after the presidential election (possibly re-clothed, of course, in a "Mondale" plan, or a "Glenn"

SETTLEMENT AND STRIFE

TO HAVE KNOWN Moshe Dayan as a colleague and a strong and rusted friend was a great privilege. 3.290006, Entatesman, soldier, scholar, and

From our first meeting, in early 1977, I was struck by his firm grasp of the problems we faced, by his agile mind and originality of Cit hought, by the vision and wisdom which he brought to every discusion which engaged us.

His contributions to the success of the Camp David Accords, and to he Egyptian-Israeli Peace Treaty, an never be adequately described. Always a patriot, he nonetheless of Survivos and Survivos 31 Survices Ltd. hat were acceptable to both the Egyptians and his own delegation. O 1/ E ? SEA when the outcome of the negotiat did on several occasions, it was often Moshe who would propose a new way of considering the question it hand, or offer a new insight, iluminating the path ahead.

Without his presence and his total nvolvement for months on end, in apite of the pain that plagued him ncreasingly, the Camp David Ac-ords and the Egyptian-Israeli eace Treaty could not have been ---- chieved.

this given to few men to do so nuch within their allotted time. moshe used those years to the fulest. He has left an unforgettable secord on the pages of history.

MOSHE AND I often talked about he relationship between Israel and AEL FREGULAR the U.S.— the ties that bind us, the trains that test us, and the imporspirations of our peoples. I will now speak about that relationship and what must be done to nourish it. We start from the fact that the at Inited States and Israel share a unijue relationship. There are close les between our governments and trong links between the peoples and the institutions in our two ocieties, all serving similar national nterests. Above all, we are partners n the pursuit of democracy and reedom. I believe the special character of the relationship derives from this duality: the sharing of both interests and when the sharing of Destink the search for economic prosperity with iuman welfare. We each place reat emphasis on scientific and inellectual development and tadership, while respecting cultural. raditions and religious commitpents. As in the nature of most special elationships, there are special tenions. Here they stem primarily rom the differences in our respecive size and position in the world community and from the ulnerability of our two nations to uttering external threats. The Inited States is a global power livceans, a nation that has not felt the npact of battle on its own soil for ver a hundred years. Israel is a egional power located in the rowded Middle East. It has faced 'ar on its borders almost without ease since its birth. The United tates is a global and nuclear power ith concomitant responsibilities to s citizens and to the world community, while Israel is concerned with concrete threats from terrorism and conventional warfare, from which it must protect its citizens. These differences in the security concerns of each country and the nature of their respective responsibilities understandably lead to variances of perception about the course each should follow in particular circumstances.

THERE ARE two contending views of the world inherent in American foreign policy: the theme of a polarized world and that of a world of interdependence. The "polarized world" theme posits for America an adversarial relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union. In this context, the United States emphasizes its military capabilities and its principal goals are the maintenance and development of military strength and the projection of power into regions of the world potentially vulnerable to Soviet dominance.

The concept of an "interdependent world" stresses the importance of peaceful relations among nations. In this view, the things American people cherish - freedom, justice, prosperity, and the hope for a better world for our children and for all mankind - are seen as depending on cooperative relationships with other nations. When this theme dominates, policy emphasizes the search for diplomatic solutions that will reduce the likelihood of tears in the fabric of peaceful coexistence.

Both themes are sounded in any American administration's foreign policy. Politicians and parties differ in their stress on each. From time to time, shifts occur so that one theme predominates over the other. Yet it is fair to say that a successful foreign policy addresses each in a balanced fashion, obtaining the benefits of interdependence while maintaining the strength to deter aggression. Such strength is not merely military, it includes economic and political strength as well. In a democracy, free expression of political views and a free press ensure that, over time, both themes are heard.

ISRAEL'S foreign policy, it seems to me, also moves between these themes. The first theme sees israel surrounded by a sea of hostile Arab nations bent on its destruction. In this image, Israel's primary concern is for its military strength, its capacity to deter and defeat any attack from any Arab state or combination of Arab states. Like the polarization motif of Soviet-American rivalry, it is fed by tangible acts of hostility, such as terrorism, or the angry rhetoric of vilification often heard in international forums. The second Israeli theme is that of regional interdependence and the pursuit of peace. Here the search is for a regional role for Israel as a nation among equals: not excluded but not dominant; a participant in cooperative economic, political, and social relations based on common benefit. This is a difficult foreign policy to maintain because it is often sidetracked by fear and distrust on both sides.

Balancing these two themes in each of our countries, is, I believe, the key to the nurturing the managing of the special relationship between the United States and

Unless a proper balance is struck between these contending themes, there cannot be a successful foreign policy in either of our countries. For example, if U.S. policy is so dominated by a preoccupation with East-West rivalry that we fail to devote proper attention to helping to resolve the problems of the Middle East, the chances for progress are diminished and our relations with Israel strained.

If Israel places primary emphasis on military solutions and on maintaining the military occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, our relationship is also strained.

In either case, the result will be a skewed policy that will cause domestic strains in our respective countries and tensions between our two nations as these policies are played out in the Middle East.

IT IS THE responsibility of the leaders of both nations to make sure that a proper balance is struck. Both countries must remain strong to deter aggression, but both must also recognize that military domination of other peoples cannot produce long-term security for anyone. We must always remember, "security is enhanced by a relationship of peace between nations which enjoy normal relations." No nations or people will cupied by a foreign power. Moreover, if either Israel or the United States allows itself to define our relationship primarily in military terms, we will damage the strands that have drawn us together. We will denigrate the deeper bond between us, a bond based on shared aspirations for peace and stability and the chance for our peoples to live their lives in dignity and long remain peaceful when oc-

Let me be clear about basic U.S. attitudes and policies. The commitment of the United States and the American people to the security and the future of Israel is firm. There can be no questioning of that American sense of purpose. This is in our interest as well as Israel's, as together we try to work for peace, a stability, and progress in the Middle

One of the most important issues affecting our relationship is the unfinished business of Camp David. What I am about to say is not start from the same place - the search for a just, comprehensive, and durable peace. All of us have repeated these words time and again. Sadly, however, our actions have not matched our words. But there is neither time nor is it fruitful to dwell on the errors of the past. There have been failures of omission and commission on all sides more than enough to go around. Whatever the reasons, it is undeniable that we have permitted serious negotiations on the core issues to languish and atrophy to a point where virtually nothing is happening. The cruel fact is that no real substantive negotiations on either the West Bank and Gaza, or the Palestinian question have taken place for many, many months.

ONE REASON is that for so long our attention and efforts have been others. Let me make clear that I am not suggesting that we should put aside the problems of Lebanon. Far from it. But, in my judgment, rather than dealing with these problems ad seriatim, we must pursue a dual or multi-track approach. To do so would ensure the commitment of our constant and active attention to each of the central issues that con-

As we watch what is happening daily on the West Bank, we see creeping annexation of that land. Unless reversed, before long, there will be de facto annexation. When this takes place, all of us will face grave danger. De facto annexation will mean that Resolution 242 is destroyed and, with it, the fun-damental bargain of exchanging territory for full peace, a bargain that has been been the basis for all the progress made to date. We will then find ourselves back at square one." The West Bank problem will be expanded into an East Bank problem, as well, with consequent danger for the Jordanian monarchy. And even the progress that has been made through the various disengagement agreements, Camp David, and the Egyptian-Israeli Peace Treaty will be placed in jeopardy. It may be that some settlementbuilding on the West Bank might contribute to Israel's short-term security. But Israel must ask itself whether such security is worth the price of foreclosing the process of peace and a more lasting security based on political agreement rather than force of arms.

The United States must hold out to Israel an uncompromising commitment to Israel's security. coupled with a vision of a future at peace. But we must also make it unmistakably clear that settlementbuilding should cease, and that the future of the settlements is a proper subject for negotiation within the Camp David framework.

This should not be viewed as an attempt to punish Israel. Rather it is a statement of political fact about the Middle East and about Israel's prospects for a peaceful future. To be sure, the Palestinian problem is not the only issue in the Middle East, but it is a problem that cannot be ignored, and it is linked to other major issues governing the peace and stability of the region.

I do not wish to suggest that fault lies only with Israel. There is fault on all sides. There has been inflexibility and unwillingness to act by Arab parties as well, and the United States has not consistently played its proper role.

Israel now has a new government, led by a man of long experience. This is an appropriate time, therefore, for Israel to take an initiative of electrifying simplicity and value: to declare a halt to new settlement-building. With this one step, hopes for peace might be rekindled throughout the region.

There is the possibility that if Israel takes this bold initiative, Arab states and the Palestinians would not respond promptly, although 1 believe they would. But as we have learned from a decade's hard-won

diplomacy in the Middle East, it is the true act of courage that offers the best prospect for breaking political log-jams. It is the inspired act that captures the imagination of governments and peoples not only in the Middle East but far beyond it as well.

THE U.S. has long pursued the goal of Arab-israel peace for many reasons. We are committed to the security and future of Israel. As we all said at Camp David, the Palestinian people have legitimate rights and just requirements. We have an obligation to do what we can to limit human suffering. We are concerned that Lebanon not continue to be subjected to the offshoots of the Arab-Israeli conflict. And we are concerned about the corrosive impact that conflict has on our other interests in the Middle East, stretching as far as the Persian Gulf.

There is no question that the pursuit of peace between Israel and its Arab neighbours requires patience and perseverance. The issues are complicated and hard. Bitterness bites deep within all parties, and history is a hindrance rather than a help in finding solutions. There are no easy diplomatic victories to be

During the past decade, we have also discovered that steady, sustained U.S. diplomacy can make a difference, that progress can be made toward the final goal of reconciling Israel and the Arab states to one another. Leaders of both U.S. political parties have contributed to that progress, first through Henry Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy, under Presidents Nixon and Ford, and then through President Carter's diplomacy at Camp David and afterward.

The key lesson of the past decade is that U.S. involvement in diplomacy frequently spells the critical difference between success and failure. When we play our part, which includes an active role for U.S. presidents, there is a better chance of moving forward, and a better chance that the parties will recognize the mutual benefits that flow from commitment to negotiation. When we abstain from an active role, the process of peace is all too often replaced by a destructive drift toward deepening conflict. In the Middle East, nothing stands still. We either move painstakingly forward or we all fail back. Resolution 242 must remain the benchmark for the efforts of both the United States and the regional parties. Despite recurring conflict in the Near East, 242 remains the best hope of channelling energies away from war and toward peace.

1 BELIEVE that the most realistic roadmap for gaining the objectives of Resolution 242 was drawn at Camp David. One cf its twin accords has already been realized: the near-miracle of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel. The wisdom of President Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menachem 'Begin turned two enemies toward peace and ultimately toward friendship.

The second half of Camp David - full autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza for an interim period of five years — has eluded our grasp. Yet it remains a valid objective. It was premised on the understanding that Israel and the Palestinians have different visions of the future for the West Bank and Gaza, and that both visions cannot be fulfilled. By providing for full autonomy and a period in which Israelis and Palestinians would work together on diplomatic alternatives, Camp David argued that time must be placed on the side of reconciliation and compromise. There must be time, it said, for both parties to learn to live with one another before final decisions are made about the future of the occupied territories. In saying all this, I underscore the words "full autonomy". Nothing less will permit achievement of the goal set at Camp David

More than a year ago, President Ronald Reagan proposed an amended roadmap designed to reach the same objective. The Reagan Plan retains the spirit and most of the substance of the Camp David Accords. Its critics argue that the Reagan proposal is too specific in setting forth a U.S. view of the outcome for the autonomy process: the association of the West Bank and Gaza with Jordan. By contrast, supporters of the Reagan Plan believe that there is need to hold out hope to the Palestinians that the end of the autonomy process could mean Arab control over occupied territories; and to Israel, assurances, which I believe are required, that it would not be faced with a potentially hostile, independent Palestinian state.

In my judgment, Reagan's proposal was a helpful contribution to advancing the peace process. I regret, however, that it has not proved possible, under either the original formula of Camp David or the Reagan proposal, to move the autonomy process forward.

The continued presence of Israeli and Syrian forces in Lebanon has, so far, delayed the return of the parties to the bargaining table. The PLO has, so far, been unwilling to agree that King Hussein join the peace process. Opportunities lost in 1981 and 1982, followed by preoccupation with Lebanon, and Syrian intransigence, have meant that the good offices of the United States were not available to test the possibilities inherent in either Camp David or the Reagan Plan.

IT MAY BE that full autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza cannot be secured so long as Lebanon festers. But it is critical, both for Lebanon and for broader peacemaking, that this objective remain clearly in our sight. It is critical that we prepare the diplomatic groundwork - this half of dual-track diplomacy - for turning all parties once again in the direction of a full and permanent peace between Israel and its neighbours.

We should now take several

First, it is important that the commitment of the United States be clear, and that the parties to the conflict begin again to face the requirements of a successful negotiating process in these discussions. Indeed, if the United States will stress this goal, articulating the broader vision can help to mobilize support for the narrower diplomatic process in Lebanon.

It is also important to face squarely the obstacles that lie in the path of peacemaking for the West Bank and Gaza. Creeping annexation of the West Bank is not the only obstacle. Other difficult issues remain to be resolved in the negotiations. It is important to make clear that peacemaking will not halt with the West Bank and Gaza, but also must in time turn to the Golan Heights. This will not remove the veto on progress that Syria has sought to evercise. But at least it will indicate to most observers in the Middle East that the peace sought is comprehensive, as agreed in the Camp David Ac-

Jordan must be reassured that the United States firmly and fully supports its sovereignty and independence, Israel must be reassured that our support for its security is unyielding. The Palestinians must come to understand that their best hope of fulfilling their legitimate aspirations lies in a political process, not in strife and obduracy. Egypt must be reassured that her willingness to make peace with Israel was the beginning and not the end of Middle East peacemaking. And Syria must recognize that she cannot impose a stranglehold on the peace process.

AS ONE WHO has been involved in the efforts to ameliorate the Arab-Israeli conflict, I believe that we can and must redouble our efforts to revive the peace process. But it will be done only if all the parties to the conflict directly face the consequences that will stem from a failure to act and a failure to recognize the mutual benefits that can flow from successful diolomacy.

We must commit ourselves anew to breathing life into the peace process and recommit ourselves to the goal of achieving a fair and comprehensive peace. To do this, each party must show its willingness to take a series of concrete steps. But, above all, each nation must demonstrate that it has the necessary political will and courage.

I can remember vividly times during Camp David when the obstacles loomed so large that it seemed we could never rea h the end of the road. But each of the three political leaders demonstrated time and again that they had the political courage to surmount the barriers that lay before them and to persevere until our common goal was achieved - the fashioning of a framework for peace in the Middle East. Because of this, the Camp David Accords became a reality. Although the hour is late, I believe that, with similar political will, it is still possible to revive the dormant negotiations.

If Moshe were here, I believe he would counsel us, as he always did, to keep the long view in mind and to pursue tirelessly the lofty goal agreed upon - a just, lasting, and comprehensive peace. And he, whose will was strong and vision clear, would challenge us to make the hard choices required.

Courage, imagination, and, above all, political will are needed. Time is short and failure to seize the moment carries with it grave responsibilities for all of us. White Collection of the Collec

They are all asthmatic and their histories are full of being rushed to emergency medical care, repeated hospitalization,

All that changes when they move to Beit Mazor, the only institution of its kind in Israel. In their home lenvironments, these children each average two hospitalizations a month. At Beit Mazor, for all 50 children together, the figure is four hospitalized a year.

There is a heavy price to be paid for living relatively free of serious asthma attacks: the children at Beit Mazor are separated from their families. Parents and brothers and sisters come to visit as often as they can, and every four months the kids get to go home for a visit. It's not an easy situation, but it can't be heiped.

More could be done - much more - to make Beit Mazor a better place to be. The first to admit this is its director, Shaul Landa, who has nothing but praise for his tiny staff. They are wonderful with the children, he says, but there is only so much the best of intentions can do, and Beit Mazor is pinched financially in every possible way.

Its worst problem is the building itself a concrete, four-storey, prefab apartment block whose limitations make it "minimally suitable," says Landa. "Look around - it's a concrete jungle."

A few of the bigger children, and they're 17, do have a room of their own — but cubicle would be a more exact description. Most sleep three to a room with enough space for their beds and wardrobes, but that's about it.

The furnishings have a povertystricken look, although the kids do their best to make their corners their own with posters and pictures cut out of magazines. One little girl has a string of cut-outs hanging above her bed, so her corner looks like the others. Looking at her bed, you would never guess that she is

LAST YEAR Beit Mazor was given a video, and it has one TV set for the 50 children. Both are used in the clubroom, where you can sit on hard benches and lean against the cement wall or choose the floor. There's certainly no space for the number of chairs that would be

Plans to build a new home for Beit Mazor exist, but have been frozen for lack of funding. Unless donors miraculously step forward with $2 million, it will be years before they become a reality, says Landa. Meanwhile, he isn't sure how much longer Beit Mazor can go on operating as things are now.

The institution is almost entirely funded by the Ministry of Social Affairs. (Ninety per cent of its inhabitants are welfare referrals.) It receives about $300 a month per child. This allotment does not cover the cost of having a nurse present around the clock, or regular visits by a doctor. Or the tutors required to help students behind in their studies from having missed too much school. Or buying or replacing furniture and equipment.

The afternoon we visited Beit Mazor, Tziona, who is in charge of supplies, took us around. Last month she came into 12 towels from the ministry, but her supply of sheets is dangerously low. Buying new ones is not a possibility - too expensive. Tziona is working on a plan to get cloth cheap and have Bracha, the seamstress, sew some Tziona pointed proudly to eight empty three-kilo tins she had collected. She wants to paint them, so the children on each floor will have a waste-basket.

In one of her cupboards, Tziona has a supply of toothpaste and other toiletries, and she has a card system to note how much each child uses. Sometimes there is a regrettable non-use of materials; her card system indicates when someone isn't brushing his or her teeth.

Making sure the children are properly supervised is a tough problem with a budget that permits three and a half counsellors. For example, 23 year-old Bruria has 17 children in her care.

At the moment, the children's bedrooms have no heating at all. None was originally put in the building, and the electric heaters used till last year proved too dangerous and had to be removed. (Kerosene heaters are unsuitable for asthmatic children.) Next month, Landa hopes, the Ministry of Social Affairs will find the money to buy heaters.

BEIT MAZOR is one of the dozens of institutions helped by The Jerusalem Past Toy Fund. Cheques for the Toy Fund and Forsake Me Not should be made out separately. Send donations to The Jerusalem Post, P.O.B. 81, 91000, Jerusalem. 1525.000 Ide and Montie Rabin, EVEN FOR HOLLYWOOD, where the hoopla surrounding a major motion picture premiere approaches that of a royal coronation, the prelaunch flurry of attention for Yenti has been something special.

The pundits ask whether a film about a girl who masquerades as a boy to become a Yeshiva bocher in a Polish shtel can appeal to the folks in lowa. Will Barbra Streisand, a Megastar (native jargon for super super star) become the first woman to pull off a successful movie as producer, director, co-writer and star? Can 41-year-old Streisand pass as the teenage girl/boy of the Isaac Bashevis Singer story? Will it be bad or good for the Jews? "No film in the last 10 years has been as eagerly awaited," wrote one critic. Among the few able to restrain their curiosity is author Singer himself, who has seen his tale "Yentl, the Yeshiva Boy" grow into a $20 million production, complete with 11 songs composed for the oc-

"First, I'll see the killing," Singer told an interviewer, "then I'll perform the autopsy."

Regardless of Yentl's critical or commercial acceptance, Miss Streisand's discovery of the story and her 15-year struggle to bring it to the screen have already become part of Hollywood folklore.

She first read Singer's short story in 1968, just after completing the highly successful musical Funny Girl, and immediately phoned her agent to announce: "I have just found my next film." Though Yentl is set in the village of Yanev at the turn of the century, the Brooklynhred toast of Hollywood saw some immediate parallels to her own life and longings.

For one, Miss Streisand's young father died when she was 15 months old, a loss that has haunted her all her life. "The first four words in Singer's story are 'After her father's death,' so already I was grabbed," she recalls.

producers and directors.

At a time of rising feminism and redefinition of sexual identities, the star also was intrigued not only by Yentl's own role change, but also by her willingness to repress her affection for a fellow male student and to marry the boy's fiancee who had fal-

ADMIRABLE perseverance, less kindly described as obsessiveness, she pushed ahead. Her dormant Jewish consciousness awakened, and to prepare herself for the role, she took counsel with Orthodox, Conservative and Reform rabbis, enrolled in Talmud study courses and kept on nudging the studios like a neophyte starlet fresh off the bus from the Midwest.

Finally, 12 years after she had embarked on her campaign, Streisand found a taker in United Ar-

On a more subtle level, Streisand saw a parallel between Yentl's determination to enter the maledominated world of the yeshiva with her own striving to grow beyond her role as singer and actress and wrest control of her artistic destiny from the male-dominated universe of

The script for Yentl went through 18 rewrites, and the final version is credited to Streisand and British playwright Jack Rosenthal, author of the controversial TV play and musical Bar Mitzva Boy. In the process. Yentl has become a woman of 28 and has gained a father (played by Israel-born Nechemia Persoff), while the 11 songs, besides making the movie more "commercial," are to serve as interior monologues to express the wants to make some sort of Jewish characters' thoughts.

Less sanguine was a Jewish teacher. "Yentl is an awful person," he said. the political-ideological film to a suspenseful art form, has opened his latest movie, Hanna K., in Los Angeles to indifferent, to bad reviews. The criticism has been directed less at what many perceive as an anti-Israel slant than to the film's failure on purely artistic grounds.

This reviewer concurs, having jotted down the following notes after the screening. Hanna K. starts with the capture of a group of Arabs (we learn only much later that they were PLO infiltrators) and Israeli soldiers dynamiting the house that sheltered them. The last Arab, a devilishly handsome chap, is flushed from a He claims that he crossed the border merely to see and reclaim his ancestral home in Galilee, after numerous attempts to establish contact with Israeli authorities through proper channels met no response. He is put on trial before an Israeli military court in Jerusalem, and his court-appointed defence lawyer is lovely American immigrant Hanna Kaufman, portrayed by thoroughly un-Jewish Jill Clayburgh. The disappearing Jews

The Jerusalem Post's David Krivine talks to Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg.

ABBI ARTHUR HERTZBERG wrathfully opposed to the present vernment's policy of creeping anxation on the West Bank. But kud ideologies are not, he lieves, the worst problem facing

: Jewish people. The worst problems are the lack immigration to Israel, and the with of Jewish assimilation in the aspora. Greatest of all threats to wish survival is the second of ese: assimilation.

The emphasis that Hertzberg es to a somewhat remote topic, ich is certainly less urgent and imatic than the Israel-Arab cont, indicates his increasing conn with the long term. He has in vays been absorbed in politics: he is a member of the Zionist Extive, president of the American vish Congress, and is, to this day, Aged 62, he now wearies of this -nistress" (politics). Or so he says. -s spirited attacks on the Shamir vernment's belligerency continue find a place in the op-ed pages of iding newspapers. He is, however, ore concerned than before with ose other seemingly humdrum ises, which excite little interest and t no headlines, yet may be more teful in the perspective of time.

"I think all Jews should make ya - me included." Hertzberg is outspoken about himself as he is out others. The reasons why he s not so far made his home in the wish state are "personal, private - kd painful." (They seem — but this only an impression - to be concted with his family.) His nationalist attachment is not America, nor-(another impreson) to Israel either, but to the wish people. At the same time, he pires to a fusion of the Jews as a ople, with Israel as their land. He eaks Hebrew as fluently as iglish, and spends an increasing rtion of each year in Israel.

HAT IS the answer to flagging "imigration? "I don't think that ar of anti-Semitism (the classic onist argument) will get Jews out the U.S., but fear of assimilation

The dilemma is clear: "Anyone no wants a reasonable assurance at his descendants will stay Jewish is to come and live here.

"Mind you," he adds, "it's not all ain-sailing here either. There is a rge incidence of the breaks into ebrew, but I translate) Hebreweaking gentiles. Still the problem Israel is manageable." Over there 🔅 is not so sure.

Being a man of action, he does 'n take setbacks lying down. Here is a scoop for you," he schares. "The Rothschild Founda-On have given the World Jewish ongress seed-money for a project 1 · ought up: to do a magbit nefashor · instead of an appeal for funds, an 'peal for human souls."

He explains: "People are used to ing approached by the United wish Appeal with the question, in you give money for Israei? Our oposal is to ring those same porbells with another query: Are our children getting a Jewish : lucation?"

A campaign on those lines is due start in a number of countries: ie U.S., Canada, South America, rance, perhaps Britain. The major wish organizations are giving full

But suppose the interrogated ouseholder says he doesn't ant his children to have a wish education? Hertzberg disinsses that objection as too

Jeoretical. "In the U.S., being Jewish is not a liability," he points out. "There is no great rush to become "amateur govim," I am ready to run into 10 per cent who will announce that they don't want to be Jewish - we must take that in our stride." The answers he expects out of his cross-questioning are of a more practical kind: the Jewish school costs money and they can't afford it, or it is too far away — complaints of that sort. The next step will be to provide the necessary help. "If we can augment the number of children at Jewish schools by 10 per cent, we shall have gained - if we exclude from the calculation both Israel and the Soviet Union -50,000 more pupils; which is a move in the right direction."

I STEER the interview back to politics, a change of subject to which he is perceptibly not averse. His opinions are strong and clearly defined: "Annexation of the West Bank would be a disaster." the retention of Israel's present borders: first, security (the country is tiny and will be indefensible if it is made tinier still); second, religion (Erctz Yisrael is the Promised Land). Hertzberg rejects both arguments with scorn. "They are nonsense from beginning to end," he informs me.

As to security: "All five chiefs-ofstaff before Raful (Rafael Eitan) are agreed that if the occupied territories were forcibly assimilated into the Jewish state, they would become a military liability.

But if they were seized by an Arab power, would they not become a threat then? Says Hertzberg: "They must be demilitarized and the high ground must remain under Israeli military control. Apart from that, we have no business being there.

"Besides" — he sweeps the organizational details impatiently aside — "the circles who want to annex Judea and Samaria are not concerned primarily with security." Their motives are ultra-nationalistic ones, in his view. I take him up on

Not religious motives? He sees that I am probing at his rabbinical credentials. He confides: "The truly religious Jew is not enamoured of territories.

"May I make the point," he goes on, "that the Council of Rabbinical Sages considers people's lives to be more important than the occupation of land. I know of only one important rabbi in the diaspora who is an out-and-out hawk: the Lubavitcher rebbe.

"I myself am a Beizer hassid." he comments, "and the Belzer rebbe is HERTZBERG SHIFTS in his chair and changes his argument. "Let us assume," he proposes, "that they (the Orthodox militants) are right and that we do have an indivisible entitlement to all of Eretz Yisrael. So we are fighting a jihad, a holy 'Moslem fundamentalists hold the same view in reverse; they, too, are fighting a holy war. The PLO see themselves as an Arab version of Gush Emunim. Between two such attitudes there is no possibility of compromise."

Yet compromise is the name of the game. Judaism to him is embodied in Hillel's dictum, "What is hateful to you, do not unto your. neighbour." He recalls another text: You knew the soul of the sojourners, because you were sojourners in the land of Egypt."

"Have we forgotten our own past?" he pleads. "I wouldn't like to be an Arab sojourning under Israeli rule today, benign as it is. We Jews were begging over the generations for a modus vivendi with the gentiles. Cannot we grant to others what we sought for ourselves?"

He is furious at the distortion by extremists of the gentle philosophy of Judaism: "Those who throw theology around are the Torqemadas of our time." He hammers at the same theme again: "The worst thing we can do with the politics of the Middle East is - to theologize them." Bad policies cannot be defended abroad either. He takes a swipe this time at Reaganite right-wingers. "The true friends of Israel are not those conservatives who see us as a sword for hire, but liberal-minded people who believe in Israel's decency and democratic traditions. "How can I explain to these elements the everyday clash between armed Jewish kids, who have become a force of occupation, and stone-throwing civilian Arab kids?"

OUR INTERVIEW took place before the meeting of Prime Minister Shamir and Defence Minister Arens with President Reagan in Washington. What, I asked, did he expect from that encounter?

"The U.S. authorities are preoccupied with immediate problems," he replied: "They want Israel's help in tripping up the Syrians. This summit between heads of state is intended to provide both sides with a victory. So Shamir will get a shortterm 'fix', and long-term problems will be swept under the carpet. Reagan's government will provide more aid than ever before" – $3b., Hertzberg estimates and on easier conditions than ever before. A spirit of harmony will rule, for the time being."

But what about the longer future?

He reneats that he is not a practicing politician any more so has time to think about what happens after presidential elections; and one such election is imminent now. When the dust settles, he warns, other considerations will acquire importance.

His finger stabs the air: "Prior to elections, all American presidents have promised to move the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem. Have they done it?" Behind the areas of agreement lie differences. Hertzberg sums them up: "In the long run, no American government can accept the annexation of the West Bank and Gaza because such a measure would mean that the Palestinian problem is insoluble."

Even that is not what bothers him most: "In the long run, I don't worry about the Americans, I worry about the Jews. I worry about what the forcible subjection of an alien population under our rule is doing to the Jewish character. I worry about the kind of people we are distorted into becoming."

MARTIN GILBERT, the historian, accuses the Israelis of not pressing hard enough for the right of Jews to leave the Soviet Union. Does Rabbi Hertzberg agree with that? He agrees that everything should be done to help get Jews out of Russia, though he does not think that more conferences and protests and speeches will do the trick.

But, I remind him, most Russian Jews don't want to settle in Israel; they prefer to become Americans. That aspiration, however, is not exclusive to them - a good many of their Russian co-nationals share it. What right have the Jews to be a special case?

"I was informed by Russian sources in the Seventies that there were at most 200,000 Zionists in the Soviet Union," says Hertzberg. "Many of them are in the Baltic states and other recently annexed territories. If others want to leave, it is because they feel cramped in the Soviet Union."

Cramped? "Persons who studied at Moscow University and rose to senior positions in the Russian state find that they cannot get their children into Moscow University any more, and that the Russians no longer need Jews in responsible positions. The Jew has 'Hebrew' on his identification papers, and the Soviets give preference to non-Hebrews. There is an understandable yearning to depart for freer climes.

"For my part, I just want them out of there, never mind their motives for leaving. If they stay they will evaporate as Jews. In the Western countries the opportunities are different. They will not only be free to study and work as equals, they will also be free to remain Jewish. If exit from Russia means that some of their young people can be saved for yiddishkeit, I'm all for

THEN WHAT is wrong with Gilbert's call for more agitatic n to achieve that end? Says Hertzberg: "I don't think that Soviet decisions to authorize or not authorize emigration from their frontiers have much to do with Jewish pressure. Their policy in this matter is influenced, if anything, by superpower relations. When the situation between America and the USSR deteriorates, the Russians have no reason to let Jews out, no matter what turnul (hue and cry) we work up at public meetings." There is a way to help. It is con-nected, once again, with the role that Israel ought to be playing in its international relations. The beilicosity of Likud policies exercises an adverse effect not only on Israel's long-term interests, but on the interests of Russian Jewry, too.

"Look at it this way. The Russians will never agree to let us keep the West Bank and Gaza, People think that the Americans may be prevailed upon to give their consent we offer wholehearted and indiscriminate support to their

"Now I am not a neutralist, far from it. I'm a man of the West, I detest dictatorships. Communist totalitarianism has to be opposed. But it doesn't follow that we Jews must be cheer-leaders in the Cold

"If the Soviets let Yosef Begun out, it will not be because of our clamourings, but because they are getting something in return. The fate of the Russian Jews depends on the state of the super-power conflict. If we are able to affect the situation at all, it can only be through the stand we take in that conflict."

Israel finds itself on the opposite side to the Russians because of Russian policies, not because Israel wishes to be against all things Russian. Hertzberg implies that if the attitude of the Jewish state was less fanatic towards the Arabs, it could be less fanatic towards the Soviets, EVEN IMMIGRATION, the subject close to his heart, is affected by the conflict: "The failure of Jews to immigrate includes the walkout of Israelis who decide to go and live elsewhere.

"I have talked to yordim (emigrants from Israel) in New York. One told me that he had left because his wife does not want her children to be shot up by Arabs -which brings us back to what I said at the beginning. Right policies on the part of the Israel government would decrease the shooting."

We conclude with renewed talk about the particular matter which absorbs him most of any, assimilation. We dwell on the tendency that has always existed at the periphery but has now become so widespread of Jews drifting away from Judaism, to the point of losing their Jewish inheritance altogether.

It is a terrible failure in the community, he intimates - a loss of Jewish purpose. A whole subject has been neglected, the subject of how to make the Jewish people survive: "We haven't put our heads together, we aren't coping with the problem, we have no sense of the danger confronting us.

"All are to blame. Our leadership is at fault, it does not measure up to the size of the terrible challenge we

"Ahad Ha'Am once remarked that if a temple is destroyed (which heaven forbid), a people will rebuild it. But if a people is destroyed, who will rebuild the people?"

Given the isolation of small American Jewish communities, the mediocre state of Jewish education and observance, and the lack of group support for many who want to maintain a Jewish identity, the chances for getting first-hand answers are poor.

Dr. Hertzel Fishman, a veteran educator and a member of the Zionist Executive, has proposed an idea to promote Jewish values, experiences and practice among the hundreds of thousands of Diaspora Jews who lack resources of their

The American-born Fishman proposes the encouragement from Jerusalem — of the establishment of hundreds of havurot. First established in Boston during the '60s, these sociological units of young Jews were formed in order to share Jewish experiences. Today, there are several hundred throughout the U.S., meeting in private homes or community centres every few weeks for lectures, study and Jewish celebra-

But Fishman notes that the 60sstyle havarot were concerned mostly with their own participants. "Their members were not necessarily committed to a distinctive Jewish home lifestyle or to a systematic pattern of home Jewish education for their children.'

Fishman advocates an "ideological havura," in which members are committed as families to a system of specific beliefs and norms. These include being part of a worldwide, interrelated, mutually responsible network of havurot aimed at helping to reconstitute the body polity of Jewish peoplehood; recognizing the centrality of Israel; adopting a daily home lifestyle that emphasizes Jewish culture, practices and values; and raising children in accordance with this ideology of Jewish survival.

THE PROPOSAL comes at a critical time for Diaspora Jewry. "The great bulk of young Jewish parents lack meaningful Jewish education," notes Fishman, "and they have not had intense or satisfying experiences of Jewish living.

Consequently, they are not able to transmit a convincing Jewish heritage to their children.'

In addition, "many Jews find that the groups and organizations to which they belong are large and, in most cases, impersonal... Since much of our lives involves an ongoing quest for affection, participation, recognition and individual fulfilment," the havurot - as small and homogeneous groups - can provide an answer. Fishman, who officially represents the Conservative Movement on the Zionist Executive but has been without a portfolio in the nearly two years that he has been on the Executive, presented the idea to WZO chairman Arye Dulzin. The plan, as he envisages it, involves the establishment of a "division of family education" to promote the establishment of haverot.

Dulzin accepted his detailed proposal, and offered him a small budget. Fishman neither sought nor received a salary, but he did request a small allocation so that he could get the project off the ground.

But the other groups on the Executive that do not have departmental portfolios immediately protested and demanded their own divisions. Dulzin backed off under the pressure, but did appoint Fishman his "adviser on Jewish family education" and approved his allocation as a part of the chairman's office budget.

DESPITE the change in title, Fishman is going ahead with his

Once havurot are established, their initiators are asked to contact Fishman and indicate the nature of the Jewish and general background of the menbers, their occupations, ages, local Jewish affiliations and the ages of their children. They should also provide a list of some of the key Jewish leaders in the community who may be of help in nurturning the havura and a list of Jewish institutions and activities in the area.

On a recent trip to the U.S., Fishman met with leaders of a large number of national American Jewish organizations, and won their approval to sponsor the establishment of havurot.

Each organization — about 25 in all — will fund a few pilot units, seek suitable people among its members, and then help them form havurot.

"We are not interested in competing with existing organizations. Rather, we want to work with them," says Fishman. In addition, all existing havurot (there are lists of some of them) will be invited to join the network on condition that they recognize and accept the ideological principles outlined by Fishman.

Each havura will be autonomous. It may comprise one generation or include many generations. Some of the activities of the havurot may in-

The Greek Cypriots are angered at having close to 40 per cent of the country - the most productive part - taken by 20 per cent of the population and they refuse to concede that partition is final. dependence was unanimous.

A MEASURE of cooperation stillexists between the two sides. The Greeks, who have the only power stations, provide all electricity to the Turks' state - partly in exchange for water provided to the Greek side of Nicosia and partly out of fear that the Turkish armed forces would knock out the power plants if the Turkish Cypriot sector were blacked out.

Each morning, a United Nations officer crossing no-man's-land between the Greek and Turkish parts of Nicosia carries stacks of newspapers from one side to the other. Within minutes, Turkish Cypriot Information Ministry officials are reading the Greek papers from across town and their counterparts in Greek Nicosia are reading the Turkish papers.

The daily routine parallels the exchange of Jordanian and Israeli newspapers each morning on Allenby Bridge. Likewise, the evening news bulletins in Turkish on Greek Cypriot television and in Greek from the Turkish station is an echo of the language-reversal by Israei and Jordan TV every evening.

To a visitor from Israel, the Turkish-Greek dispute is a mirror image, only slightly distorted, of the Israeli-Arab dispute in many of its physical and emotional characteristics.

THE ALMOST total lack of political empathy between the two sides is also reminiscent of the Arab-Israel dispute. Both protagonists dig in behind their grievances and choose to see no justice in the dark forces across the border. In Turkish Nicosia, prominent signs point to the Museum of Barbarism, dedicated to Greek atrocities. The Greek side provides visitors with extensive literature on Turkish atrocities. The words Enosis and EOKA are rarely seen on the Greek side anymore. But they can still be seen on the Turkish side scrawled on walls of villages which formerly had Greek residents - partly because the peasants are too poor to paint the walls, partly because the Turkish Cypriot authorities are not unhappy about perpetuating reminders of Greek militancy.

Although both sides strenuously woo the Arab world for economic Israel generally draws a surprisingly friendly response. "People think Israelis are a warloving people, but they're the opposite," says a young Turkish volunteer a decade ago. "I went to ing escape from the summer heat in find out the secret of their persistence and determination. I found that what made them strong was not that they were warlike, but that they were human and civilized. The Israelis know the Arabs better than the Arabs know themselves." The official recalled watching on Israel TV the visit of then German chancellor Willy Brandt to Yad Vashem. "He cried there because he repented. The Greeks haven't repented. Sure, terrible things happened in history, and the Turks did terrible thungs too. But to put them repent.'

in Famagusta on the east coast, a Turkish businessman, hearing the Israeli inflation rate mentioned as he joined a conversation, said, "Sure they have inflation. They're fighting the whole Arab world. And they never lose." He recalled watching Jewish "illegal" immigrants captured by the British being off-loaded in Famagusta port after World War II and taken to an internment camp outside the town. "I remember them marching off the ship singing all together. People on the walls [of Famagusta's Old Cityl threw them oranges. One man who obviously never saw one before tried to eat one with the peel."

Pointing to a snack bar beneath the city wall at which people were waiting for a ferry to the Turkish mainland, he recalled a British army lorry parked there and the cry of a baby coming from the back, where a Jewish refugee was giving birth moments after being taken off the

Inside the walls was an arcaded one-storey building that had been a British storehouse to which Jewish refugees would be brought from their camp to pick up supplies.
"My father had a shoe store just across the street," said the business-man. "Some of the Jews who were shoemakers would come in for materials. I remember the numbers on their arms. One day just after the war, when there were still German P-o-Ws here, the British made a mistake and brought a group of, prisoners to the warehouse just as a group of Jewish refugees was arriving. A tremendous fight broke out and the British then made sure they brought them on different days.'

He recalled that a friend who had been seriously hurt in falling off a horse was treated by a Jewish surgeon who was an inmate of the

Having other couples and families at hand who share similar values can be of great

Much of Fishman's budget will be used to locate written and audiovisual materials available for the specific needs of havurot abroad (he wants to establish them not only in the U.S., but throughout the Diaspora), or to produce materials in areas where they are not available. These materials would be sold, at a low price, to the havurot which ordered them.

Fishman believes that chairman of the various departments in the World Zionist Organization will not view him as a "threat," but rather welcome him, since havurot will be able to serve as a steady clientele for material that they produce, sometimes without an actual in the communities.

He expects to use existing WZO emissaries for promoting haveror, and to brief those who will in future be sent out about the importance of Jewish family education.

NOT CONTENT with founding havurot only in the Diaspora Fishman is interested in promoting a different kind of havura in large seemingly a much more difficul iob. since the needs are much dif ferent and Israelis' time is mon limited.

Untimely quarrel

ON THE FACE of it, the vocal disagreement between Deputy Premier David Levy and Premier Yitzhak Shamir is over the question whether Mr. Levy should, or should not, be allowed to exchange the housing and construction for the foreign affairs portfolio currently held by Mr. Shamir. In fact it is over Mr. Levy's unconcealed desire to be the next premier himself.

Mr. Levy lost out to Mr. Shamir after Menachem Begin bowed out. But the deputy premier's vaulting ambition, though set back, has not been extinguished. Although he has made a name for himself in housing and construction, Mr. Levy plainly feels that a more prestigious ministry would serve him better as a launching pad in advance of the next Knesset

Yet his new position must not be such as to pose too daunting a challenge — which is no doubt why he spurned the offer of the Treasury before Yigal Cohen-Orgad snapped it up. Mr. Levy is not one to take undue risks.

In any case: Mr. Levy claims that he had the promise of foreign affairs when Mr. Shamir formed his cabinet two months ago. "Sources close to the premier" stoutly deny the claim, but the denial need not be taken too seriously. It is more reasonable to assume that Mr. Shamir has simply changed his mind about a promotion for his deputy that would involve a surrender of some of his own prerogatives.

Now that he is no longer viewed as a mere "transition premier" Mr. Shamir is anxious to build a power base for himself. There is certainly no reason for him to assist a rival such as Mr. Levy to accumulate power.

To be sure, Mr. Shamir must want Mr. Levy in the cabinet, for the one-time Beit Shean politico can carry with him, or so it is alleged, most of the North African community. But he must also want him down. The humiliation caused to the deputy premier by the chief's failure to report to him on the progress of the talks in Washington last week can only have been deliberate. Mr. Levy's angry response to this humiliation could well have been foreseen. But now the deputy premier may also be branded as a splitter who raises the spectre of a Labour-like internal rift within Herut ranks.

To the public at large, the most relevant issue is nevertheless Mr. Levy's fitness to be foreign minister. Mr. Shamir is said to believe that he lacks the necessary professional qualifications, and the overwhelming majority of Israelis agree. But this could change if Mr. Levy were given a chance to prove his mettle. The example of Ernest Bevin, a great British foreign secretary, athough an enemy of Zionism, is a warning to all those who look down their noses at untutored former union leaders.

Sheer professionalism is not everything. There is also the little matter of intelligence and ability. In the past Mr. Levy has shown himself to be both intelligent and able. For a time he even served a useful role as a guardian of the cabinet's conscience on foreign affairs and security. He, more than any other minister, stood up to Ariel Sharon during the Lebanese war, and he was the only cabinet member to voice reservations about the employment of the Phalange in "cleaning up Palestinian refugee camps.

More recently, however, Mr. Levy has offered evidence suggesting that his earlier conduct may not have been more than a momentary aberration. Attempting to prove attachment to Herut doctrine, he has been pushing the cause of settlement in Samaria even at a time of financial stringency. And in open defiance of the premier he hastened to sound the tocsin about an imminent Syrian attack on Israel.

On balance, then, it is by no means certain that Mr. Levy's appointment as foreign minister, quite apart from its wider national significance would be an improvement on the existing situation.

Positive trend

THE STATEMENT by five leading Arabs of East Jerusalem and the West Bank condemning Tuesday's terror bombing of a Jerusalem bus is most welcome, even if it equates that outrage with "violence against civilians" in Ein Hilwe and Nablus. True, the initiative for the statement came from an Israeli Jew, a member of the left-wing New Outlook movement. But the decision to publish it in the Arabic press was that of the five Arab leaders themselves.

Their action suggests a break with the old Palestinian practice of trying to excuse plainly inexcusable crimes against Israeli civilians by the PLO. Responding, in effect, to Premier Yitzhak Shamir's mocking comment in the Knesset, after the bombing, on the PLO's "moderation," the five appear to be saving: "Please do not tar us with that brush." Mr. Shamir, in fact, yesterday welcomed their statement as a "positive

The five have not broken with the PLO - indeed they continue to support its "legitimate leadership." They do not denounce the organization itself, professing to believe that it could not possibly, despite its own acknowledgment, have sanctioned Monday's murderous attack.

Nevertheless these five persons, who include two deposed mayors, represent a group among the Palestinians that is open to a dialogue on peaceful coexistence with Israel, based on the premise of the essential separateness of the two nations. Strangely, it is this very group that is being systematically harassed and hounded by Israel's military government.

TERRORISM AND DIPLOMACY

LAST TUESDAY'S bomb outrage in Jerusalem could conceivably have been just another example of the sporadic terror Israel has endured for most of the past two decades: more devastating than anything the city has known for the past five years, but nonetheless no more significant than any of the

But its timing, at a critical point in the history of the PLO, which has claimed responsibility for the blast, may not have been incidental, and the incident itself could mark the start of a new phase in the enduring PLO-Israel struggle.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat is on the point of leaving Lebanon, ignominiously, for the second time in less than 18 months, driven out of his last stronghold in Tripoli by Syrian-backed rebels in his own organization. It is reminiscent of his predicament in August last year, when he was driven out of Beirut by Israel.

Arafat has managed to survive his latest ordeal, at least physically, but he is now on the threshold of a struggle to rebuild his battered credibility as worthy leader of an effective PLO

He embarks upon that struggle with considerable credit, far more than might have been expected coming to a man so severely mauled twice over the past 18 months.

His popular appeal among Palestinians, both in the administered areas and in the refugee camps of Lebanon, remains remarkably untarnished, driving home the point - again, for the second time in 18 months - that there is no direct correlation between his military might and his claim to leadership of the Palestinian cause. But he cannot hope to count on that indefinitely, and he is going to have to, in the months ahead, work hard to parlay his popular appeal into undisputed leadership of the PLO, as yet the only broadly acknowledged voice of Palestinian nationalism.

THE BOMB blast in Jerusalem could conceivably have been Arafat's first move in his upcoming struggle to heal the rift in the PLO and to repay the political debt he owes to those PLO leaders who continued to support his leadership throughout the Syrian-backed rebellion, even though they are highly critical of many aspects of his leadership.

Foremost among these were George Habash and Naif Hawatmeh, the leaders of the two largest groups in the PLO after his own mainstream Fatah. It was their support, possibly more than any other factor, that thwarted Syria's efforts to effect a putsch against Arafat from within the PLO, and which, in the final analysis, saved his skin.

But while they were prepared to support his leadership, they made it

By DAVID BERNSTEIN

plain all along that they were in sympathy with many of the rebels' claims — including that of a more militant line against Israel - even ifthey were not prepared to endorse their recourse to internecine bloodletting to achieve their goals. And they have made it equally plain that Arafat is going to have to go some way towards meeting those claims if he is to retain their support in the upcoming struggle.

·Tuesday's blast could, quite conceivably, have been the first instalment of Arafat's debt repayment to Habash and Hawatmeh.

MATTI STEINBERG, a lecturer and researcher at the Hebrew University and one of Israel's leading authorities on the PLO, believes that the outrage was very probably the work of Arafat's PLO mainstream rather than his radical opponents; that it may, in fact, have been the opening shot in his struggle to rebuild his credibility.

He notes that several weeks ago, Sa'id Kamal, one of the leading pragmatists in the PLO and a strong supporter of Arafat's diplomatic offensive against Israel, stated in an interview with the Saudi newspaper al-Yom that what the organization now needed was "a spectacular action inside Israel" - and he gave the reason why: "We need to prove

Steinberg believes Tuesday's blast could well have been the kind of "spectacular action" Kamai had in mind, noting that responsibility for the explosion was first claimed by the Cyprus-based Palestinian news agency Wafa, which is totally under Arafat's control. This would appear to indicate that even if it were not in fact, the work of Arafat's mainstreamers, he is prepared to accept responsibility

The fact that the action came on the very eve of Arafat's departure from Lebanon is also highly significant, Steinberg notes, as it would serve to pre-empt any claim by the rebels that he is now impotent to carry the "armed struggle" to STEINBERG WARNS that there could be further such outrages in the months ahead as Arafat goes about reconstituting himself as the effective leader of a unified PLO.

But he stresses that this would by no means indicate that Arafat has abandoned the search for a political solution, probably in cooperation with Jordan, even if he is forced to soft-pedal this for the time being.

Arafat has never, in fact, seen any contradiction between armed struggle inside Israel and a diplomatic offensive. On the contrary, the two have long been seen as complemed tary, part of a single tary, part of a single strate; designed to achieve a single goal

Kamal, in the al-Yom intervie quoted above, gave expression the identical view, In addition stressing the need for a "spe tacular action inside Israel," stressed the need for a PLO pear initiative based on UN Securi Council resolutions 242 and 338

So, Steinberg concludes, any a tacks that take place inside Israel the months ahead could, somewh paradoxically, indicate that Araf is preparing the ground for renewed diplomatic offensig against Israel - and not that he h given in to the rebel demand at opted for armed struggle in place diplomacy.

Before he could embark up such an offensive, he would have prove to his rivals that he is a opting for diplomacy out weakness because he has t alternative, but because he believ it is the most effective means of ;

taining Palestinian national goals The true sign that Arafat b finally abandoned diplomac Steinberg notes, would be his on sanction of terrorist actions again Israeli and Jewish targets abroad something, unlike actions insi-Israel and the administered terms ritories, he has long condemned counter-productive to his efforts evolve a credible diplomat posture.

CYPRUS CAMPS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, - In February 1984, it will be 35 years that the refugee camps in Cyprus were closed. More than 50,000 illegal immigrants passed through these camps on their way to Eretz Yisrael.

A committee of former illegal immigrants and emissaries has decided to set up an organization to perpetuate this special episode as educational and informative material for all those who did not experience it personally, as we did.

We want to draw up a list of all those who participated in this episode in the history of aliya. In the name of the committee, I appeal to all those who passed through the Cyprus camps - immigrants, emissaries and representatives of the Yishuv institutions — to write to us, giving full particulars: name, date of arrival in and departure from Cyprus, name of vessel, party affiliation, job, names of other immigrants in the Cyprus camps, and any further relevant data. Letters should be addressed to me, c/o "Cyprus," Tel Aviv Municipality.

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — It is difficult to understand why Professor Benjamin Akzin (November 30) alleges that, in my article "Apparent moderation" (November 23), I seemed to "accept and support" the thesis, which he ascribes to Dr. Susan Hattis Rolef, that "there is no essential difference between individual and non-selective mass terrorism." No such view was expressed or implied in my article. Its subject was accurately defined in its title: to analyse statements made by Mr. Yitzhak Shamir, on TV and in private and press interviews, in order to reach a better understanding of the man who, as prime minister, has the power to make momentous decisions on behalf of all of us. Although I do not intend, on this occasion, to discuss the subtle ethical distinctions between various varieties of terrorism, there is one flagrant omission in Professor Akzin's article which should not be passed over. In listing the groups whose purpose is "to weaken the regimes they oppose by...sowing panic among the general population" and for whom civilians are the "intended victims," he did not mention the Irgun Zva'i Leumi. At least during the pre-war period, the Irgun perpetrated a number of deliberate attacks against Arab civilians, in which scores were killed and injured. In May to July 1939, for instance, there were indiscriminate IZL attacks at the Rex cinema in Jerusalem, the Arab village of Bir-Ades, and the Arab market in Haifa, as well as numerous attacks on Arab passers-by.

The execution by the British of Shlomo Ben-Yosel, who did not even fire a shot, was a judicial atrocity, and he faced death with exemplary fortitude. But what was the act for which he has been canonized by the "Jabotinsky school," with a street in his name and a stamp in his honour? His declared purpose was to kill Arab civilians, and thus to break the official Jewish Agency policy of havlaga, self-restraint, which meant using weapons only against armed men, and not against civilians.

The danger is that the policy of Jerusalem.

honouring the memory of all who fought for Israel's independence. with or without the official sanction of the pre-State "national institutions," may not only falsify history by giving the impression that there were three more or less equal "underground movements," but may appear to condone Jewish counter-terrorist" attacks on Arab civilians - with results that we can see in recent events in Judea and

LATE TV

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, - I thank Marian Glucksman for her letter of November 24. I too am one of the many who would be glad if Mabat were advanced by at least one hour and - more important - who is deprived of the best and most interesting TV programmes since almost all of them are being transmitted in the late hours.
